

THE Body Politic 50¢

Gay Liberation Journal No. 25 August

POLICE:

Entrapment
Olympic crackdown

Olympic Crackdown

It was made official over the long weekend in May. Representatives of most of Ontario's gay organizations were meeting in Kingston. They were told by an employee of COJQ (Committee to Organize the Olympics) that a directive had been circulated to the effect that "nonconforming elements," including gays, were to be "driven underground" in the population corridor stretching from Quebec City to Toronto.

The COJQ employee cannot be identified and, since COJQ security documents cannot be copied, the story could not be verified.

But that was hardly necessary. There was no doubt that the police were raiding gay establishments with unprecedented frequency. For a short period in late May and early June, all the baths in Montreal were closed. Identified as bawdy houses and raided by cops wielding axes and crowbars. For a lot of men in Montreal, their first experience of the great Olympic "clean-up" was the sight of a policeman's axe crashing through the door of their room at the baths.

But the games were only months away, and the raids in Montreal and Ottawa were merely the acceleration of a process that had begun much earlier. Fifteen months before, in Montreal.

Reaction: The Crackdown

On February 4, 1975 the Montreal police raid the Aquarius Sauna Bath and charge 35 people with being "found-in in a bawdy house." Now a gay bath is not a house of prostitution, but the "bawdy house" laws are double-edged: a bawdy house can be any place that is resorted to for the purpose of prostitution or the practice of acts of indecency.

Charges are almost never laid under that section of the law. In fact, the manager of the Club Bath chain in Canada informs us that, to his knowledge, this was the first time in recent history that charges have been laid under that provision of the Criminal Code. But it would be used again and again.

October 17, 1975. The police raid five Montreal bars: the Rocabole, le Mylissque, P.J.'s, the Limeight and le Tournau d'Or. They enter the bars and order all those standing to leave, then check for drugs and under-age drinking.

Halloween, 1975. Police raid P.J.'s and Baby Face, a popular women's bar. Plainclothes police enter Baby Face and order those standing to leave. Those lacking proper ID are taken to the police station and held until family or friends bring proof of age.

November 7, 1975. The Limeight is raided again. One officer, when questioned, simply smirks and says: Routine operation.

There are reports as many as eighty arrests during the month of November in the public washrooms of Centreville (downtown Montreal).

On January 23, 1976 police raid the Club Baths of Montreal. Thirty-four men are charged with being found-in in a bawdy house. There had been six hours of surveillance - the police went about in towels, like ordinary customers, for two hours on the nights of January 21, 22 and 23. The raid comes shortly after midnight on the 23rd.

During the raid, an employee offers the police a passkey to all of the rooms in the building. It is refused. The police use axes and crowbars, doing over $500 worth of damage.

In Toronto on March 10, 1976 two officers of the RCMP Security Service visit Gay Alliance Toward Equality president Tom Warner. They want to know what, if anything, that organization is planning for the Olympics. They're looking for "cooperation." Later in the month, neighbours observe three Toronto police officers emerging from the apartment of a Body Politics Collective member while he is away at work. He is never officially told of the visit.

By 1978, the acceleration. The games less than two months away.

FIGHTING BACK: 300 Montreal gays march June 19.

At 1.00 a.m. May 14 the police raid the Neptune Sauna in Montreal and arrest 80 men - it is billed as the break-up of the most important male homosexual prostitution ring in North America. Four men are charged with being 'keepers of a bawdy house'; the other 85 are charged as found-ins.

Again doors are smashed down even though employees offer a passkey. Police forcibly enter rooms with flash cameras and take pictures. In each case the procedure takes only a few seconds. By this means the police convert sexual activity in private - perfectly lawful - into sexual acts in the presence of a third party, gross indecency. Police also seize the Neptune's membership list. It contains over seven thousand names.

Over the weekend of May 13-15, police raid five of Montreal's gay clubs: the Tournau d'Or Studio One, the Strick Club, Jilly's, and the Crystal Baths. Police reportedly arrive at Jilly's, a lesbian bar, with rifles and cameras.

On May 20, Montreal police raid the Club Baths for a second time and arrest 26 people. Again, most are charged with being found-ins.

Then at 2.00 a.m. on May 22 Ottawa police raid the Club Baths in Ottawa - the first raid of its kind in the National Capital Region. Once more employees of the baths offer the police a passkey and again doors are smashed in. Twenty-seven men are arrested. 26 are found-ins, two for gross indecency and three others with being keepers of a bawdy house. The police seize the Club Bath membership list. This time the cops carry off over three thousand names.

Eighteen raids in 15 months and one visit from the RCMP. Eight of those raids occur in the last two months. It doesn't take any leak from the COJQ Security Committee to let us know that we are the victims of an Olympic crackdown.

Action: The Gay Movement at Work

Sometimes it takes vicious repression to make people fight back.

Montreal has never really had a truly viable gay movement. Divisions between francophones and anglophones were just one of the problems. But on June 19, the newly formed Comité homosexuel anti-repression (CHAR) organized the largest gay demonstration in Canadian history.

Three hundred gays and supporters marched from Doran's Square past Premier Bourassa's office, COJQ headquarters and city hall to Viger Square, where an enthusiastic rally demanded an end to the raids and the quashing of all charges laid against men arrested in the baths. There were speakers from CHAR, from the National Gay Rights Coalition, from Gays of Ottawa, from the Toronto Gay Alliance Toward Equality, from Women's Contingent, from the League for Socialist Action. There were messages of support from the main gay organization in Scotland, from the New York Gay Activist Alliance, from the Vancouver Gay Alliance Toward Equality. There was even a letter of support from the parents of one of the organizers. That was the most visible, most militant action taken by the gay movement. But it was not the first.

The news of the raid on the Ottawa Club Bath reached Kingston on the morning of May 22. By noon, Gays of Ottawa, who were there for a lesbian conference, had moved quietly and efficiently into action.

Three members of the executive returned to Ottawa to monitor the situation and arrange appropriate action. By nine o'clock that night GAO's statement on the situation had been released to the media and was appearing on the evening news-casts.

Later that night, members of the group found the Ottawa-Hull bars and clubs and distributed a leaflet alerting the community and announcing a special meeting of Gays of Ottawa to be held the following Tuesday.

By that time, the organization had notified both the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and M.A. Michael Cassidy, (NDP, Ottawa-Centre) of the situation.

On May 24 Gays of Ottawa held a news conference at the GO Centre. The media took the situation seriously - by the next day the organization's statement had received sympathetic coverage from both Ottawa dailies, from all eight radio stations, and from the four television stations.

The gay group was informed that on May 25 the Ottawa Citizen held a special internal meeting and decided against publishing the names of those charged as found-ins. It was when the police released those names - a direct result of their mishandling of the homosexual vice ring scandal and the criticism to which they were subsequently subjected. Criticism arranged and orchestrated by Gays of Ottawa.

Seventy-three people attended the special Gays of Ottawa meeting May 25. And on May 26, fifty people turned out to picket Ottawa police headquarters. It was the largest public gay protest ever held in Ottawa and received good coverage by the electronic media.

Simultaneously, five thousand kilometres away, the Vancouver Gay Alliance Toward Equality staged a demonstration. Forty people marched in front of the Vancouver courthouse in solidarity with the Ottawa and Montreal gay communities. And on June 18, a forum entitled 'Against Police Repression' was well attended by the city's gay community.

In Ottawa the police were apprehended for the 'found-in' to appear in court. Gays of Ottawa was referring many of those charged to sympathetic lawyers. And offering counselling to those clients of the bath who were emotionally shattered by the raid.

At a meeting May 26 with Ottawa mayor Larry Greenberg, the group confronted him with the 'clean-up' charge. The mayor denied any knowledge of a 'clean-up', but added frankly that he had no control over the police.

In Montreal, CHAR continued in its efforts to alert the gay community, to shut the city's bars and clubs were labelled with a bilingual handbill which summarized a citizen's rights in the event of arrest or harassment.

They had also decided that gay visibility was important in a city that was trying its best to drive its gay people underground. As a result, three successive weekends of Gay Festival events have been planned to give the community a continuing high profile in the city.

The reaction across the country was quick, efficient and effective. The strategy had two aims: to tell gay people

continued on page 17

Body Politic

Gay Liberation Journal

No. 25 July/August 1978

"The liberation of homosexuals can only be the work of homosexuals themselves."

Kurt Hiller 1921

FEATURES

Anne Bonny and Mary Read:
Lesbian Pirates

Entrapped

Making the Line: Gay
Male Image in Ballet
(Our Image)

DEPARTMENTS

News

Editorial/Letters

Opkies

Trash

Flaunting It

Classifieds

Community Page

Cover photo by Gerald Hannon

COLLECTIVE MEMBERS:

David Gibson, Gerald Hannon, Ed Jackson, Michael Lynch, Tim McCaskell, Gary Ostrom, Ken Popert, Joyce Rock, Herb Spiers, Robert Trow, Mary Walker

CONTRIBUTORS:

John Arpue, Susan Baker, Don Bell, David Foreman, Graham Jackson, Gary Kinsman, Brian Mossop, David Newcome, Michael Riordan, Stuart Russell, Keith Sly, Dan Stairton, Bob Watson, Ian Young

NEWS CORRESPONDENTS:

Robin Metcalfe (Halifax), John Blacklock, & Ron Dayman (Montreal), David Garmata (Ottawa), Jim Monk (Windsor), Doug Helquist (Saskatoon), Bob Cook (Vancouver)

The Body Politic is published as twice a year by Pink Triangle Press, a nonprofit corporation, as a contribution to the building of the gay movement and the growth of gay consciousness. Responsibility for the content of The Body Politic rests with the Body Politic Collective, an autonomous body operating within Pink Triangle Press. The Collective is a group of people who volunteer their time and labor to the production of The Body Politic in support of the Collective in representing its interests and clearing material editorial expenses. Offices of The Body Politic are located at 24 Duncan Street (Rt. 101) in Toronto.

MAILING ADDRESS: The Body Politic, Box 7281, Stn. A TORONTO, ONT. CANADA M6J 1X3
Phone (416) 963-5237

The Body Politic is printed in Vancouver. Unusually by Current Press Group, a water-based and non-toxic printer.
AVAILABLE ON MICROFORM FROM:
McGraw-Hill
Box 572, Station 6
TORONTO, Ontario
CANADA M6J 2N6

COPYRIGHT © Pink Triangle Press
2ND CLASS MAIL REGISTRATION NUMBER 3245
ISSN 0211-0018

This publication of an advertisement in The Body Politic does not mean that the Collective endorses the advertiser.

Member

Canadian Periodical
Publishers'
Association

WE WELCOME
SUBMISSIONS
AND CONTRIBUTIONS OF ALL KINDS:

articles, letters, opinions, short stories, poems, cartoons, drawings. Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your submission. Articles of a sufficiently controversial nature may be accompanied by comment by the collective or we consider qualified to write on the subject. All letters will be considered for publication unless clearly marked not for publication.

Deadline for issue #26: August 11

Editorial

Olympic crackdown

We are in the midst of the "Olympic crackdown." Or an Olympic crackdown, depending on which side of the fence you happen to fall.

It started in Montreal. The city has a long history of police-state tactics against anybody who opposes the status quo. Bars and baths were raided by shotgun-wielding heavies in uniform early last night. Then it spread to Ottawa. They hit the steam baths, lock names and addresses, arrested over 20 in Toronto the night before at the Gay Alliance Toward Equality was visited by the Mounties. They wanted to know if gays were planning any further subversive for the Olympics.

Why a crackdown now? What do gay bars have to do with the Olympics? Are they afraid we'll seduce those husky young men and women, come to give their all to shut-punting and high-jumping? Are they afraid the sight of a same-sex couple might send some affronted dignitary scuttling back with stories about how all Canadians are queer? Or maybe they think we might kidnap the Israeli team and hold them until "sexual orientation" is put in human rights codes? Obviously not.

The Olympics are only an excuse for the crackdown/cleanup. Although the athletes may end up sleeping twelve to a room, no expense has been spared on "Olympic security." A lot of "law enforcement officers" and their bosses how have the time and money to do what they've been itching to do for a long time.

Gays are not the only minority being harassed. Anti-establishment political groups, immigrants, women's groups, community social services, unions in Quebec's Common Front - all are being subjected to the same heavy-handed intimidation as we are.

Gays and the gay movement are no immediate threat to the Olympics. But in the long run we're a threat to the status quo. It was out of the closet that is. That's why bars and baths are being raided and their membership lists handed out to police headquarters. That's why they want to take on the opposition (that includes us) before we get too strong. This time, the excuse is the Olympics.

This is obviously a show of strength. Our future freedom to live our lives and organize for our rights may depend on the kind of response we can muster now. Gays are a threat to the status quo. Gays are an excellent example to keep in mind. Gays across Canada should get their sisters and brothers in Montreal their support.

And we must be prepared to take similar action if it is warranted. Otherwise "Olympic Security" could be only the beginning of a continuing and generalized repression aimed against gays across the country.

Letters

Flaunting It

In Michael Riordan's "Flaunting It" he builds a heated case for blasting the doors from every closet in the nation. Rise to the defense of the closet as necessary to survival in a ruthlessly heterosexual society. Mr. Riordan deplores closet cases who let others fight their causes for them. I invite him to come with me as I tell my wife that I don't need her, resign from my job and clean out my desk, and drop the news that will keep me from my place of worship. Public pressure will demand that True there is a cost for living in the closet, regardless of whether it's the luxury or the economy model. But the price is well worth preventing the holocaust that would break loose if I came boldly out.

No, Mr. Riordan, burning bridges behind one and living openly and honestly gay is not a answer for every individual, every time.

N. Harrington

Saint John, New Brunswick

Mr. Riordan, your Boldly Minded Ignorance in writing "Voices from the Closet" reveals the impotence and impotence of purile Marxist revolutionists who want to turn the world upside down overnight.

You have opted for a gay activist role. It was your free choice. Step back, looking at those homosexuals who wish to remain in the closet for whatever reason. You state that we are prospering from your hard work in gay liberation. I agree. But I can assure you my life style does not include gay liberation; and that is my free choice.

I applaud your hard work, your precarious existence. It is apparent that gay liberation work is something you thrill to, that gives you satisfaction. So be it. I love you for your commitment.

But attempt to pull me out of my brilliantly lit, expansive closet now and I promise you a kick that will propel you to the pinnacle of the CN Tower.

A Reluctant Participant
Toronto

In these times of growing reaction it is encouraging to hear from voices such as Michael Riordan's. There will undoubtedly be many who will respond to his June column with indignation, backed up by a variety of excuses about the hostile straight world. Yes, coming out does require great sacrifice. It may even involve ostracization. But for most inhabitants of the closet today the risks could never be as great as those faced by the first gay "rebels." They did not even have the luxury of access to a movement paper such as The Body Politic from which the "closet" question could be comfortably argued. Riordan deserves our thanks for placing this controversy in historical perspective.

His anger is a response to a more frightening development. There are those who would like to bite the revolutionary's hand that feeds them. The current open denigration of radical gay politics (manifested by Giddings's recent editorial in The Advocate) and the growing trend towards homophile, reformist liberalism (as evidenced by the notion that the enactment of civil rights legislation is enough) is a most dangerous sign. We must make the connection between the move from within the homosexual community to silence gay activists and the larger system's resistance to further challenges to sexist/homophobic values (e.g. the Olympic crackdown, the US Supreme Court sodomy ruling, the failure of ERA). Riordan's view is clear: just we lose all we have gained since Stonewall, the need for tearing down the closet walls is now greater, than ever.

Miguel S. Morgado
Petaluma, California

Care to Share?

In the last B.P., Toronto Area Gays placed an ad asking for financial help. We received none. When we first organized as a group last year, our friends said that our non-aligned gay phone line wouldn't work, couldn't work, too many obstacles, too much commitment required, and it would cost money. I believed it could and would work. We put in our own money, each according to his ability, and on January 29 we answered our first phone call. In two months, almost 300 calls, and a thousand phone calls later, we are still going strong and the need is even more evident for the existence of a place where the isolated gay person could be heard, be listened to and given support, and hopefully, be given a new, positive perspective on being gay.

At our last meeting, members again put their hands in their pockets and pledged their personal contributions to ensure that we will continue to be there to speak with and listen to those who call.

But there is a lot more we could do, want to do, should do, a second telephone line so that more people can get through to us... A write-in service for those too distant to call. A room for a drop-in and for face-to-face counselling... These extra services will take money, money we do not have. If any reader feels that he or she can spare a buck (or two, or twenty) then a short while these services can become a reality. Until that time, the core group of T.A.G. will continue to answer our phone."

(Glad to hear that the Toronto Area Gays, may we help you?)

If YOU care, if YOU want to help other gay people - SHARE, send what you can afford. It will really help.

Haverly and Stan

Members of Toronto Area Gays
P.O. Box 8706, Station A, Toronto

John Damien

We protest the article "The Marketing of John Damien" by Gerald Hannon which appeared in the June issue of The Body Politic. The title alone is an insult.

The impression that there has been an element of deceit in bringing the case of John Damien to the attention of the public, and that somehow John Damien derived advantage from this deceit. An article in a gay journal that implies that a job has been put over on the public seriously compromises the efforts of the Committee to Defend John Damien to widen public support. By indicating that homosexuals themselves harbour reservations and place conditions on support for John Damien, the article violates the basis for a united defense campaign around the key issue of employment rights, and provides individuals and organizations an easy way out for withdrawing effective support.

It is astounding that this article should come along at a time when John Damien is further victimized by his former employers precisely because of the piece in Weekend Magazine! It is obvious that the John Hestess article was not written from a gay liberation perspective. What else was to be expected? But it is obvious to imply indirectly that John Damien was complicit in writing it and shares responsibility for it.

The "Marketing of John Damien" introduces an alien and harmful concept into gay politics by suggesting that the personal lifestyle of a gay provides sufficient grounds for determining whether a gay is worthy of support. The only pertinent issue is the fact that John Damien was fired from his position, for which he was qualified and experienced, because he is a homosexual. It is the public position of the gay movement that sexual orientation should be irrelevant in employment practices.

The "Marketing of John Damien" should rectify the damage caused by "The Marketing of John Damien" by re-affirming unconditional support for John Damien.

Stephen Shireffs
Chairman
GATE (Vancouver)

Gerald Hannon's article attempted to highlight the ways in which John Hestess tried to play down John Damien's homosexuality to make him an acceptable person to the editors of Weekend Magazine and, by implication, to its readers.

We are distressed that anyone who read either the title or the text of Hannon's article could come away with the impression that it criticized John Damien personally or suggested that The Body Politic no longer supports him.

Anyone who has formed such an impression is wrong. The Body Politic without reservations of any kind supports John Damien and the Committee to Defend John Damien in their struggle to restore Damien to his post and uphold the rights of gay people.

The Collective

Ontario

NDP adopts gay rights plank

Harold Desmarais presents the motion

The biennial convention of the Ontario New Democratic Party, meeting June 11-13 in Kingston, voted by an overwhelming margin June 11 for a resolution which calls for the inclusion of the term "sexual orientation" in the Ontario Human Rights Code. The vote marked the first time that a major political party has adopted as policy one of the fundamental "demands of the gay movement," the recognition and protection in law of the basic civil and human rights of lesbians and homosexuals.

As introduced by well-known Windsor gay activist Harold Desmarais, the resolution received approval from the Metro Toronto Area Regional Convention of the party in early March. (See The Body Politic #24.)

The fundamental CRO demand, that the Ontario Human Rights Code be amended to incorporate sexual orientation, received widespread support from the delegates. It was evident from the debate that a majority also supported some of the secondary demands. In particular, the need to eliminate discrimination against gays in the Ontario civil service seems to have been impressed upon the party by the Damien case.

Two of the Coalition's points, however, appeared to provoke considerable unease. These were the demands that sex education in the schools should not be biased against homosexuality and that sexual orientation should not be a consideration in child adoption and custody.

On the first morning of the convention, Globe and Mail political commentator Norman Webster was busy stirring up prejudice against gay people. In his column that morning he suggested that the gay child adoption and custody demand is one of the "nutty" resolutions of the Ontario NDP.

Webster is the son of Bob and Matt Coleman and president R. Howard Webster. This authoritative, if yelled, threat that the newspaper would use the issue against the NDP in the next election was enough to petrify some MLAs and other election-minded people.

After Desmarais completed the introduction of his resolution, two more delegates spoke in his favour. A delegate then moved referral of the resolution to committee with no specific instructions. This procedural manoeuvre would have effectively killed the resolution. But when a standing vote was taken, the motion was defeated.

A second referral was moved, this time with instructions. Odoardo di Sanlo, MLA for Downsview, called for the removal of all but the fundamental clause broadening the Ontario Human Rights Code. Members of the Gay Caucus were shocked by the motion. They said di Sanlo had informed them of his intention to refer, but had assured them he would call for the removal of only the two most controversial clauses.

At this point an eloquent plea was delivered by Hamilton Labour Council member Ted Powell. Powell urged the party to assume a positive and aggressive role in fighting discrimination, "championing the rights of minority groups," he said, "the party cannot take half-measures. Educating the public about gay discrimination is the responsibility of a party that cares about minority groups."

Following Powell's speech, the mood of the convention was excitement. Gay delegates were talking seriously of the passage of the entire gay rights package. But then the mood shifted. The next and final speaker attempted to tap the underlying homophobia and prejudices of the delegates. This speed swung the balance against acceptance of the entire resolution. The decision was close and another standing vote was required. The delegates approved referral to committee, thereby effectively deleting all of the resolution except for the fundamental CRO demand.

When the committee brought back the resolution containing the fundamental demand for gay civil and human rights, the convention passed it almost unanimously.

A maximum of ten delegates voted against the gay rights resolution. There were, however, three important abstentions, by Gay Caucus members Denis LeBlanc, Tom McEldown, and David Durs. They explained their action in the following statement: "The issue before us is a very important first step toward the recognition of the rights of gay people and it is our hope that the convention here today will pass it. However, as gay persons, we feel that to vote in favour would be a compromise of our personal principles. This watered-down version of the resolution denies us the basic rights and prerogatives given to heterosexuals, in effect, discriminating against us as gay persons. We find, therefore, that we must, in conscience, abstain from this vote."

The victory was the culmination of many months' work by the Gay Caucus. The Caucus is a genuine cross-section of the NDP. The visibility of its members as individual party workers contributed greatly to the victory.

Harold Desmarais is constituency assistant to MLA Ted Bouness, who represents the strong labour riding of Windsor-Sandwich. Denis LeBlanc and many other Ottawa gays had worked in MLA Michael Cassidy's election campaign. Peter Waite was the party's campaign manager in the suburban Toronto riding of Arrowdale. Other members of the Gay Caucus are actively involved in their riding associations.

In their campaign for gay rights, NDP gays appealed to people in their own ridings and throughout the province. In addition, every MLA received a letter with a copy of the gay rights resolution and an elaboration of its clauses. Work was also done within the unions. Ron Cattrick of Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) local 2001 spoke to fellow hospital workers. Kathy Beeman, an articulate radical representing the CUPE Metro Toronto Council and a member of CUPE local 1230 (University of Toronto library workers) also offered strong support.

All segments of the media reported the adoption of the resolution, not just in Toronto and Ottawa, but also in rural southwestern Ontario and north to Red Lake and Moosonee.

by John Argue
& Dan Stalton

Toronto

Women in jeans
now OK at gay bar

About 30 lesbians and gay men picked Jo-Jo's, a Toronto discotheque, during the early evening of June 4. The establishment had instituted a policy of banning lesbians wearing jeans. There were no dress restrictions on men.

Within the week the establishment had reversed its policy. When contacted by The Body Politic, the manager stated that Jo-Jo's would no longer close its doors to women in jeans. "However, any women involved in fights will be banned," he said.

The manager denied that the picket had any influence on his decision to change policy.

However, he had received a visit from officers of the Ontario Human Rights Commission. They advised him not to ban women in jeans, but simply to note the names of the fighters. They could then be excluded in the future.

The Commission's visit came as a result of complaints filed by women who also attended the picket. Four separate complaints had been filed.

Two of the women who went to the Commission later told The Body Politic that they had gotten a chilly response when they revealed during the course of their complaint that Jo-Jo's was a gay disco.

They were told that if they were being discriminated against because they were lesbians rather than women, the Commission could do nothing. The officer also noted that some bars probably find it necessary to keep "bitches" out in order to prevent fights.

The women contacted the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario to file a second complaint. They were told that very little could be done. In fact, it was explained to them that the place could probably keep women out if it didn't give a reason for so doing.

Spokespersons in both the gay male and lesbian communities were pleased with the results of the picket and the complaints to the Human Rights Commission.

Demonstrators outside Jo-Jo's, June 4

National

Libertarians
organize

A new organization, Libertarians for Gay Rights, has been formed by US and Canadian gays of libertarian and anarchist political philosophies.

Purposes of LGR include promoting continued positive attitudes to gays within the libertarian movement, working for total individual rights for gay people, and advancing opportunities for persons of varying lifestyles to live among each other in peace and harmony, free of coercion.

Membership in the organization is open to gay and non-gay libertarians anywhere in the world.

An editorial by John Vernon in the LGR Newsletter states: "We as libertarians know that the basic premise of libertarianism is the sovereignty of each individual, and that no one has the right to violate the sovereignty of another. This means that each man and woman is his or her own ruler, and may do what she or he pleases, so long as they do not violate the rights of others."

The editorial goes on to say that in order to attain this right for themselves, it is essential that gays come out of the closet and fight.

LGR member Martin Nixon has been chosen as the US Libertarian Party's candidate for New York senator, opposing Conservative Republican James Buckley.

Membership in LGR is $5 a year, students $3. Additional information may be obtained from Ian Young, 315 Banting Ave., Scarborough, Ontario M1N 2S6.

Lavender Tories are coming out

The formation of a gay caucus within the Progressive Conservative Party was announced in Edmonton May 3 by party member and caucus spokesperson Wayne Madden.

Madden said that the caucus will campaign for a change in party policy on gay rights, urging the party, its leaders, candidates and MPs to adopt a favourable stance. Tactics will include briefs on key issues, letter-writing campaigns, and the introduction of relevant resolutions at party conferences.

Madden injected the gay issue into party politics for the first time last August when he asked a Progressive Conservative Youth Conference to endorse the removal of prohibitions against gay people from the Immigration Act. The motion failed on a tie vote.

The 'lavender Tories' have circulated a statement on gay rights to Progressive Conservative MPs, securing a positive response from Douglas Roche (PC, Edmonton-Strathcona).

A leaflet of a party conference in Edmonton late in May brought out representatives from Progressive Conservative Youth Federation national president Harry Burman.

A brief on gay issues, recently distributed to selected PC leaders, has so far produced little response, but Madden feels it is still too early to assess results.

Looking at the prospects of the PC gay caucus, Madden says, "I sincerely believe that the party will adopt a gay rights policy, but it will only be with the hard work of gay Tories in Canada that this can come about. We must come out and fight."

By Ken Fopert

Social Credit overturns gay decision

At a special meeting May 22, the national executive of the Social Credit Party of Canada re-affirmed its traditional anti-gay stand and expelled all known gay members.

A pro-gay ruling had been previously made March 5 by the leader of the provincial party in Ontario. This ruling failed to gain the approval of the general membership.

Ottawa

DSO laws: a call for abolition

Legislation which classifies people as 'dangerous sexual offenders' and which puts them away in prison indefinitely should be abolished.

This is the main thrust of the brief presented May 12 by the National Gay Rights Coalition (NGRC) to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The Committee is studying Bill C-83, the government's 'peace and security' legislation.

The National Gay Rights Coalition is a coalition of 27 gay organizations from across Canada fighting for civil rights for gay people and for the removal of federal legislation which discriminates against homosexuals.

The Coalition is opposed to the 'dangerous sexual offender' provisions of Bill C-83 because of:

- the difficulty in determining the potential dangerousness of an individual
- the abuses which have stemmed from this legislation in the past
- the vague and imprecise terms of the legislation
- the lack of safeguards and the disregard for the rights of the individual
- the inhumane treatment 'dangerous sexual offenders' have received in federal penitentiaries

In its brief, the Coalition quotes from several studies which show that many persons have been wrongly classified as 'dangerous sexual offenders' under the existing legislation.

The Coalition then goes on to detail some of the more obvious injustices in Bill C-83, including:

- the provisions for attempting to determine 'dangerous sexual offender' status are inadequate
- one offence is enough to classify someone as a 'dangerous sexual offender'
- non-violent offences such as 'gross indecency' are included in the list of offences which can lead to the 'dangerous sexual offender' classification

the individual is not given sufficient time to prepare a defence to the 'dangerous sexual offender' allegation

- despite the severity of the punishment, the individual does not have the right to a hearing by jury
- 'dangerous sexual offenders' who are paroled must stay on parole for life even if they commit no further crimes or misdeeds and are a model of good behaviour.

"The most blatant of these injustices is obviously the inclusion in this Bill of non-violent, consensual offences such as 'gross indecency,'" the brief says.

Gross indecency is used to refer to all sexual acts, outside of heterosexual coitus, performed by two persons not married to each other, one of whom is under 21, or by any two persons in a public place (which, under the law, includes a park or a parked car, or anywhere at all if more than two persons are present). Gross indecency is only used in cases where there is no violence and both parties consent to the act.

By David Garmale □

MPs ignore brief, harangue gays

"It was just like one of our educationalists in the local high schools," concluded Gays of Ottawa President Denis LeBlanc after a presentation by the National Gay Rights Coalition (NGRC) to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on May 12.

The Coalition was expressing its opposition to the legislation on 'dangerous sexual offenders,' part of the so-called 'peace and security' bill.

NGRC had been called as one of the witnesses and was represented before the Committee by LeBlanc, Ron Dayman, from the NGRC Coordinating Office, and Charles Hill, past president of Gays of Ottawa.

The Committee members did not seem to have read the NGRC brief which had been distributed to them a week earlier and, instead of engaging in a rational discussion of the points raised in the brief and in the opening statement, they got sidetracked onto unrelated, emotional issues.

In its brief, NGRC calls for the abolition of all 'dangerous (sexual) offender' legislation on the grounds that the present law is inhumane and has been repeatedly abused, that existing sentencing laws are sufficient to deal with violent (sexual) offenders and that both the existing and proposed legislation is based on a concept of dangerousness which is impossible to determine with any degree of accuracy.

Those members of the Committee who addressed themselves to NGRC's call for abolition of the legislation suggested that the demand was totally impractical and not likely to find any support on the Committee.

Mostly, however, Committee members stayed onto territory not covered by the brief. The first speaker after the opening statement, Simma Holt (Liberal - Vancouver Kingsway), said she was concerned with "children who are victims" and proceeded to spend almost ten minutes expressing her concern.

In response to a question from Charles Hill as to why the government doesn't establish a uniform age of consent in order to remove discrimination against homosexuals, Holt said: "I will tell you why I would not agree to that because there is an age where boys and girls are sexually ambivalent and they are not sure what they are, and at that point they can be turned into a homosexual which is not, as you know, the easiest life in the world for a human being."

"Are you making it any better?" Hill responded.

The Committee was then treated to an emotional tirade from René Matte (Social Credit, Champlain) who set the theme for his remarks with his opening sentence: "Our society must be very sick indeed if the government gave you permission to appear before us."

Matte continued in the same vein and his speech contained statements like, "It is ridiculous to speak of discrimination when one sees how many homosexual associations exist," and, "Gentlemen, I think you are all sick and that you have a great deal of nerve to appear before a parliamentary committee."

Matte didn't stick around to hear any reaction, but all three NGRC representatives responded with anger and disgust.

The NGRC Coordinating Office has since written to all MPs on the Committee to summarize again the main points in the brief and to explain that although NGRC stands behind its call for abolition of the legislation, it did not realistically expect the Committee to endorse that call, but that it hoped the Committee would seriously consider removing some of the many injustices from the legislation.

On May 28, in another presentation to this committee, Professor Cyril Greenleaf of McMaster University in Hamilton, who has spent years researching 'dangerous sexual offenders,' made almost exactly the same points as NGRC had made.

Greenleaf, however, was very well received by the Committee and his presentation turned into a very good discussion rather than the confrontation which characterized the NGRC appearance.

As a result, NGRC is hopeful that some amendments to the legislation might be forthcoming at Committee stage, before the bill goes back to the House for final reading. NGRC plans to keep on pressuring the Committee and especially Stuart Leggett, (New Democrat, New Westminster) NDP Justice Critic and the only NDP member on the Committee.

by David Garmale □

Toronto

New GATE Executive Committee. (L-R) Brian Mossop, Christine Bearchell & Tom Warner

GATE approves lesbian caucus

The Toronto Gay Alliance Toward Equality (GATE) has decided to formally constitute a Lesbian caucus within itself and has for the first time elected a woman to its executive body. The steps were taken June 5 by the fourth GATE Conference, a special meeting held every six months to assess the group's progress and make plans for the future.

The Conference elected Christine Bearchell and Brian Mossop to the Executive Committee. Bearchell is the Coordinator of the Committee to Defend John Damjan. Prior to his election, Mossop was the Coordinator of the Coalition for Gay Rights in Ontario.

Bearchell and Mossop joined President Tom Warner on the three-person Executive Committee. Warner was elected by the Conference to his third consecutive term as GATE's president.

Also elected were John Argue, CGRD & NGRC; Chris Bearchell, Damien defense; David Foreman, revenue; Terry Phillips, Gay Rising; Michael Riondo, education; Dan Stanton, membership; Ian Turner, treasurer; and John Wilson, secretary.

The Lesbian Caucus was approved on a motion by Bearchell. The move was seen as part of GATE's attempt to address itself constructively to the rising interest of lesbians in political activism.

The main work of the Conference was the discussion and final adoption of a resolution put forward by members David Foreman and Dan Stanton. The document analysed past problems of the organization and set priorities for the months ahead.

The resolution was adopted unanimously and now becomes GATE policy for the next six months.

By Ken Popert □

4th Annual Toronto: September 4, 5, 6, 1976

Gay (NGRC)

for lesbians and gay men in Canada and Quebec hosted by GATE (Toronto), 193 Carlton Street, Toronto Day care and simultaneous translation services will be available. Toronto readers: If you can bill delegates, please write us.

Ontario

House debates gay rights

Proposals to include 'sexual orientation' in the Ontario Human Rights Code made the order paper twice in the same day recently in the Ontario Legislature. Both were introduced by private members.

The private member's resolution of MLA Margaret Campbell (Liberal - St George) was introduced during the private member's hour late in the afternoon session of May 6. The resolution had been on the order paper since the fall session of the legislature, and had first been promised by Campbell in a meeting with representatives of the Gay Alliance Toward Equality in December of last year.

Earlier in the same day Ted Bounsaill (NDP - Windsor-Sandwich) introduced a private member's bill which would amend the OHRC to include "physical disability, criminal record, political affiliation or sexual orientation" as illegal grounds for discrimination. The bill proposes all the specific changes required in the code.

The Campbell resolution is phrased very generally. It proposes only an expression of the will of the House to amend the Code to include "sexual orientation and affectional preference". A private member's resolution requires unanimous consent of the House before it can come to a vote. Most such resolutions die without fanfare.

cabinet ministers present. Besides Margaret Campbell, four members spoke in favour of the motion: Larry Grossman (PC - St. Andrew-St. Patrick), Julian Reed, (Liberal - Halton-Burlington), James Fenwick (NDP - Riverdale) and Ted Bounsaill. Michael Cassidy (NDP - Ottawa Centre) could not be present but issued a press release in support of the resolution. One member, John Williams (PC - Orléans) spoke against it.

The debate was generally intelligent and of a high level. In fact, it was so "elevated" that one visitor who had been in the gallery was moved to remark that their own sexual preferences and not to be discriminated against because of their preferences," said Bounsaill.

Campbell was confident homosexuals caused "no damage to the community." Grossman left that prejudice against "those who simply have a different lifestyle" must be controlled by legislation. Reed warned that "for people of different sexual orientation, freedom and justice in the province are still smothered by prejudice."

Comic relief was provided by the member from Orléans, John Williams. He told the OHRC was not Enlisy Post's book of etiquette and social behaviour. He quoted at length from an American journal of psychiatry to which he had turned for "guidance and advice." There he discovered that homosexuality was "the tip of a psychodynamic, psychosocial iceberg." Amid catcalls from the Opposition, Williams plunged confidently into a semantic quagmire: "I do not think a mantle of normalcy should be bestowed upon persons who do not believe in a totally normal social way as recognized by society."

Opponents black out Damien case

Ontario government employees who stand accused of dismissing "racing steward John Damien last year for being a homosexual," have moved to suppress further media coverage of the Damien case by issuing writs of libel against Damien and others at the end of May. The pretext for the libel action is an article about the Damien firing which appeared last February in Weekend Magazine. Ontario Racing Commission director W.R. McDonnell and Consumer and Commercial Relations Ministry personnel director P.C. Williams contend that they were libelled by a statement in the article that Damien had been fired because of his homosexuality.

The action followed the filing of notice of libel in March. The possibility of further libel actions has effectively deterred media coverage of Damien's firing and his suit against the Ontario Racing Commission for wrongful dismissal. Informed legal opinion is that the libel action is completely without substance and has been launched solely to frighten the press into silence on the Damien issue.

With the courts in recess, no further legal activity is expected until August. In the interval, Damien lawyer Harry Koppylo will be doing the research and background work needed for the legal battles ahead, while the Committee to Orléans John Damien will embark on a period of fund-raising.

The Ontario Racing Commission has engaged in more than a year of pre-trial manoeuvring, apparently designed to exhaust the financial resources of the Damien campaign before the case comes to trial. For this reason, much of the six thousand dollars which the Committee has so far raised has already been eaten away. Committee Coordinator Chris Bearchell is appealing to everyone who supports John Damien to back up that support with a donation. She also urges supporters to turn out for fund-raising events in their cities to show John Damien that they are behind him all the way.

by Ken Popert

Ted Bounsaill

It was sometimes difficult to know that homosexuality was under discussion at all.

Many of the arguments that the gay movement has used in its campaign for legal changes were identifiable in the speeches of those who spoke in favour of the resolution. This is concrete evidence of the influence that the movement is beginning to have on the thinking of politicians.

Michael Cassidy

Frequent reference was made to the complex nature of the discrimination which homosexuals experience, especially at their workplace. Both the Damien and Doug Wilson cases were cited as examples of discrimination in employment. Cassidy and Bounsaill discussed the circularity of the blackmail argument, pointing out how the power of the blackmail would lessen with the removal of fear from the minds of gay people by a clear statement of their rights in the Code. "Persons have a right to

Ottawa

MP moves to silence gays

The following motion was introduced in the House of Commons on May 13 by Armand Gauthier (Creditiste - Villeneuve):

That the House direct the government to amend the Criminal Code to include a provision making it an indictable offence for an individual to expose publicly his or her homosexuality and to advertise in favour of homosexuality.

Gauthier introduced the motion with these justifications: "Considering that since the adoption of the omnibus bill in 1969, homosexuals, not satisfied with being able to do what they want in privacy, between consenting adults, demand the right to attack children, as evidenced by their manifesto demanding the abolition of all legislation on the age of consent, considering also that these repulsive demands clearly show that the liberalization of legislation concerning homosexuality was a mistake and because of the lack of respect shown by homosexuals for the great majority of Canadians."

The motion was introduced on the day following Gays of Ottawa's presentation on the repeal of Dangerous Sexual Offender legislation. At that time Creditiste MP René Martineau supported the gay delegation. Martineau seconded the Gauthier motion.

Such motions require the unanimous consent of the House. The motion failed.

Halifax

Group disco closes, community centre possible

In the past three months the Gay Alliance for Equality of Halifax has suffered some disappointments and internal conflicts arising out of the operation of The Other Side, its Saturday night discotheque. Begun in January as an alternative gathering place for Halifax gays, it quickly became a major success, drawing a genial mixed crowd with its warm conversational atmosphere. It was par-

John Damien

Help him in our fight.

Make cheques payable to: the Committee To Defend John Damien Box 117, Stn V Toronto, Ont.

Margaret Campbell

A private member's resolution is probably the least effective way to bring about legislative change, a fact of which Ms. Campbell could not have been unaware. Her downtown Toronto riding is thought to contain the largest concentration of gay people in Canada. The publicity generated by the resolution can be seen as an attempt by Campbell to placate a still somewhat unknown quantity: her gay constituents.

Although Campbell had earlier informed Body Politic that both Stuart Smith, the Liberal party leader, and Robert Nixon, the former leader, supported the resolution, no statements have been made by either. Most observers see the Campbell resolution as a safe trial balloon on a still politically sensitive issue, with Liberal Party intentions being more good than real.

The Campbell resolution is significant, however, because it is the first time that the sexual orientation amendment to the OHRC has been debated, and favourably, in the Ontario Legislature.

As is usual with private member's hours, attendance was poor. Only the members who spoke plus a few other opposition members remained in the Chamber. There were no Conservative

GREENSHAFT DESIGNERS

LANDSCAPES OF DISTINCTION
DESIGN AND CONSTRUCTION
534-7951

GAY ALLIANCE TOWARD EQUALITY

A civil rights organization for Gay women and men

Meetings: 1st Wed. ea. month
8 pm at 193 Carlton Street
Dances: 3rd Sat. ea. month
9 pm at Church St. Community Centre
519 Church Street
Office: 193 Carlton St. (416)
964-0748
TORONTO.

2 1/4 inch
BUTTON

Line green lettering, over the pink triangle, moron back

Oppressive, judgemental moralisms are caused when isolation and ineffectiveness alienate people from their real morals. We need to work against others' moralisms and overcome the moralisms inside us producing self-oppression.

75¢ ALTERNATIVE BOX 46 STN M
TORONTO ON M6S 4T2

NOTE: Our office has been burglarized and the addresses of those who've ordered pins taken. If you have not received your pin please send your address again. Thank you.

NAVAJO JEWELLERY

SILVER & TURKHOISE
RINGS, BRACELETS, NECKLACES

FROM $15. to $2000.

SKIN & BONES

667 YONGE ST. AT ONARLES

Are you plowing through 100 people

just to find 5 people who really like you ?

A new introduction service is starting a Toronto Branch.
The registration fee is only $5.00.

For friendship, association, or relationships.

The very least you could gain are new friends without a random trial-and-error search through 100 people just to find 5 people you relate to - that's expensive in time, money and emotions.

Call 920-0940 for information.

It provides a way to meet the type of person you're looking for.

NEWS

icularly popular with gay women and provided a place where gays and straights could mingle comfortably.
The strain of running the popular disco soon showed within the GAE, which found most of its energies tied up in the operation and in the business manoeuvres associated with it. In April attendance dropped off, and the disco was closed at the end of that month.

The experience had a definite positive side, however. It made the GAE better known to Halifax gays, and during its brief life-span generated a new self-awareness and pride within the gay community. The profits from the disco were put into a special fund toward a Gay Community Centre, which for the first time appears as distinctly possible. The GAE hopes to develop alternative meeting places for gay Halifaxians. This month the group is experimenting with less formal supper-meetings to encourage new people to attend.

In other news, a Civil Rights Committee has been formed to develop a campaign for legislative change on the provincial level. The group has received some good publicity, with interviews on CBC radio and TV and on private stations, news coverage in the Mail Star and a major article in the 4th Estate, the main alternative newspaper. The good coverage by CBC is ironic in light of that Corporation's refusal to grant the GAE access to public service advertising.

The new executive of the organization
includes: Robert Isnor, Chairperson, Clyde Richardson, Treasurer and Robin
Metcalfe, Secretary.

Finally, a newsletter is being started,
to be published monthly and distributed free locally. Individuals wishing to receive copies by mail send a dollar-fifty for twelve issues to the Gay Alliance for Equality, Box 161 Armistice St., Halifax, N.S. B3L 4G9, or call (902) 429-6969.

By Robin Metcalfe

Ottawa

Two more 'sex scandal' victims absolved

Two more cases have been disposed of in the Ottawa male prostitution affair. In one case the charges were withdrawn and the other resulted in an acquittal.
This leaves only one case before the courts, not counting the assault charges against two Ottawa policemen responsible for all the arrests.

Not one of the 18 clients' has spent a day in jail or paid a fine.

Meanwhile, the Ontario Government continues to refuse to set up a public inquiry into the affair, despite the growing clamour for such an inquiry from politicians, the media and gay groups. Gays of Ottawa, the Ottawa Citizen, NDP MLA Michael Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre) and Liberal MJA Albert Roy (Ottawa-East) have all publicly called for an inquiry, as has the lawyer representing Gervais and Methot, the two policemen charged with assault.

The Gays of Ottawa call for an inquiry came after the media revealed that the police had coached a key witness in the case in the preparation of his sworn statements.

This was the latest in a series of improprieties which have been revealed since the case began 15 months ago.

Gays want share of community facilities

Gays of Ottawa (GO) has proposed that Ottawa City Council provide lesbians and gay men with access to community-owned facilities. GO representative, John Duggan, presented a brief at a recent open town hall meeting of Ottawa City Council with approximately 300 people attending.

The brief pointed out that, although lesbians and gay men constitute 10% of the population, the publicly-funded community centres offer no programs or events oriented to the specific needs of gay people.

The brief stated: "we are becoming increasingly angered that such facilities are available to other citizens for their creative expression and development but not for gays, although we vote and pay taxes equally with these other citizens."
Gays of Ottawa has proposed that facilities of a community centre be made available for gay community dances on a regular basis. A Gay May Day dance has been held in the Jack Purcell Community Centre but only after 5 months of bureaucratic stonewalling tactics had been overcome.

The town hall meeting and Gays of Ottawa's brief received wide media coverage in the Ottawa area.

By David Garmaise

Italy

National congress debates strategy

"Come out of your isolation. Tell everyone who you are and feel it with pride."
That is our message to lesbians and gay men, the message we will take into the streets of Italy during the coming legislative elections. The Radical Party, which in the electoral battle on Radical Party states and candidates will run as gays.
Our campaign will be a public one. It will be the first time in Europe that homosexuals will be taking their political and electoral destiny into their own hands".

With this statement from its final convention document the 5th National Congress of the Fronte Unitario Gram-scuole Rivoluzionario Italiano, the gay liberation organization affiliated to the Radical Party, closed April 25.

Two points of view were put forward in the course of the convention debate.
Some speakers maintained that with an autonomous movement, gay men and women can recover their identity and their right to life and happiness without non-gays playing a role.

Others said that gay liberation is a political struggle which must involve a confrontation with the social structure, parties and cultural and political organizations. In this respect, there was harsh criticism of left-wing parties for their inability to take on the problem of sexuality in all its dimensions.

The final document, which received unanimous approval, declares that the left and extreme right must take a serious look at the question of sexual liberation.
To that end, gays who do not find their views reflected in FUORI are called on to "actively carry the sexual liberation struggle to the political groups they work in". The document adds "FUORI", working within the Radical Party, and the other groups that will gradually be appearing will give birth to a sexual liberation movement."

People's Sex Education and Sexual Liberation Association newsletter

Toronto

Why you won't find us in Woodbridge

A Toronto area advertising agency representing virtually all local newspapers has refused to accept advertising from
The Body Politic.

The paper had submitted a display ad soliciting subscriptions. The advertisement featured the cover of issue #24, a photo of two young men smiling out at the onlooker.

The agency represents 9 newspapers
from Oakville, Mississauga, Etobicoke,
New Toronto, Scarborough, North York,
Richmond Hill, Aurora and Woodbridge.

In a letter, P.A. Drake, Director of Sales for Metrospan, advised us simply that the ad was "unsuitable for publication."

In a telephone conversation with The Body Politic, he refused to state why the ad was unsuitable. He said that "he knew his readers."

The matter will be brought to the attention of the Ontario Human Rights Commission during The Body Politic's presentation to that body in September.

Gays address rights review hearing

The Coalition for Gay Rights in Ontario (CGRO) presented a brief June 17 to the review committee of the Ontario Human Rights Commission (OHRC). The brief, The Homosexual Minority in Ontario, was read at a public hearing by CGRO Coordinator John Argue on behalf of the Coalition and its coordinating group, the Toronto Gay Alliance Toward Equality (GATE).

The review committee was set up in March 1975 by the Commission to recommend changes in the Ontario Human Rights Code. The committee is now travelling around the province and will hear presentations from several new groups at the Coalition.

The CGRO brief was mailed to the Commission and to all MLAs earlier in the year. It documents cases of discrimination in support of its principal recommendation, that the term "sexual orientation" be included in the Code.

After reading the brief, Argue presented a shorter paper describing the growing support for such a change both in the gay community and among trade unionists, civil libertarians, political parties, and individual politicians.

Ontario gays first raised this issue in 1972, but have always run up against a stone wall trying to talk to the Commission. Former CGRO Coordinator Ian Turner pointed out to the commissioners present that in 1973 it had been necessary to picket the OHRC office just to obtain a meeting with the Commission to discuss the suggested Code change.

Another brief which touched on the gay rights issue was one based on a survey carried out by Times Change Women's Employment Service, an organization which finds jobs for women. The paper said that "even though sexual orientation was not included in our questionnaire, several respondents indicated that they felt discriminated against on this basis... we feel that a great deal of discrimination occurs in this area and urge that sexual orientation be added to all areas of the Code."

Many of the presentations at the hearing criticized the Commission's failure to fulfill its educational role. Times Change said the Commission placed too much emphasis on conciliation and not enough on enforcement. A GATE representative said the Commission should be empowered to impose meaningful penalties without having to get ministerial approval to set up a board of inquiry and to prosecute.

A member of the audience summed up the need for protection on the basis of sexual orientation when she observed: "It would be ridiculous for women to have to disguise themselves as men, or blacks as whites, to get a job. It is just as ridiculous for gay people to have to disguise themselves as straight."

by Brian Mossop

Kingston

Conference urges Lesbian autonomy

The Queen's Homophile Association of Kingston sponsored a conference May 22-24 called The Not-So-Homosexual Woman: Lesbian Perspectives in the Gay Movement. Fifty men and forty-five women from Ontario, Quebec, and Nova Scotia attended.

Prior to the conference, Wages Due Lesbians circulated a paper on the imperative need for lesbian autonomy in the gay movement. The paper outlined their reasons for not sending an official delegation to Kingston (see Dykes, this issue). This paper and a letter from Toronto's Gay Alliance Toward Equality outlining its reasons for not sending an official delegation were the only conference documents.

Conference planners had assumed that the way to decide the relationship of women to the gay movement was to have both women and men put forward their ideas on a lesbian perspective. But the conference chose another direction.

Kingston: "Recovering without the men, the women's conference began..."

On Saturday morning in the first plenary session Frances Wylant, a member of Wages Due Lesbians, moved that the women meet alone to decide the content of the agenda and the direction that women wanted the conference to take. She pointed out that the first question facing lesbian women was their autonomy in the gay movement, and noted that "the power relation between men and women - the power that men have over us because they are in a world where men have money - and women don't - doesn't disappear when the men are sleeping with each other."

The power of a movement for gay liberation depends on the power we build, as lesbian women, against the power that men straight and gay have over us. The question we're here to sort out, the men can't help us with."

Recovering without the men, the women's conference began with a discussion on autonomy and the conflict of interests in the gay movement between women and men. Participants noted that men may be fighting for things that won't improve the lot of women at all. As Marie Robertson of Ottawa put it: "When 'sexual orientation' is put in the Human Rights Code I'll still be a woman with no time and no money."

Some women from smaller centres expressed the fear that autonomy would mean either remaining in mixed organizations with no connection to the "autonomous women" or leaving those organizations and thereby leaving the facilities that are necessary for organizing. Others countered that if women within a mixed organization formed an autonomous lesbian group within that organization they would have a stronger voice in demanding that those resources be always at their disposal. It was apparent that changing from the gay movement to a lesbian movement meant something that many women had not experienced before: organizing with other women to build lesbian power.

A discussion on Wages Due organizing developed into a deeper exploration on the Wages for Housework perspective and why lesbian women are fighting in the campaign. The wage, it was pointed out, would allow any woman to leave a marriage if she wants to, would allow lesbians to have children if they want, and would give all women the power to choose whether or not to be lesbian. Wages Due members argued that participation in the Wages for Housework campaign is a lesbian strategy because it breaks their isolation and increases their power as lesbians.

Some women began talking about past and present marriages and the kind of how that the men had on them. Others talked about what wages for housework would mean to them. Still others began demanding the right to be paid for what they want to do, to speak about sexuality at women's conferences, to run women's clubs, and everything else that they could do when they refused unpaid housework.

The women met with the men at the end of the conference to report on their discussion. Their report was made in the form of a written statement:

"We have decided that there exists a need for an autonomous lesbian movement in Canada to fulfill our needs, and thus have formed an informal coalition. Our fight for an autonomous organization of lesbians began at this conference on Saturday morning when we women took the weekend into our own hands. We made this conference our own. However, because of the fact that a number of lesbians are isolated in small communities and feel the need for support from mixed gay movements, this autonomy in some cases will manifest itself as an independent lesbian voice from within those movements."

We realize the need to build our power as lesbian women so that we need no longer subordinate our interests to those of the straight women or the men straight and gay - and so that our lesbian sisters who are in the majority of cases still invisible to us will have the possibility of coming out.

With the awareness that many lesbians did not attend this conference for various personal and political reasons, we have postponed the formalization of strategy proposals until we have a larger more representative voice. To this end two lesbian conferences will be held. Wages Due Lesbians Toronto will sponsor one this summer on Lesbians and Wages for Housework, and one will take place in Ottawa next fall.

We welcome support from gay men who endorse our stand and believe that the efforts of our autonomous movement will be a positive move in strengthening the fight against oppression."

Women came away from the Kingston conference with a new sense of power and direction. They felt they could now go back to their mixed gay groups and inform autonomous lesbian groups whose function would be to organize women to attend the two conferences planned for the future.

by Boo Watson

GAY TIDE

SUBSCRIBE TO

Gay Tide
2146 Yew St.
Vancouver, BC
Canada

$2 for 6 issues
$5 for 6 issues
(supporting subscription)

All papers sent in plain wrapper.

The Coalition for Gay Rights in Ontario brings together 15 gay groups across the province to fight our rights

Current Activities:

1. Committee to defend John Damien
2. Winning protection for gay people under the Ontario Human Rights Code
3. Preparation of a unit of study on homosexuality, to present to local school boards.

Write to for a copy of The Homosexual Minority in Ontario documenting discrimination against gay women and men. Price $1.50

Or, send more and support our work.

For information:

193 Carlton Street
Toronto, M5A 2K4
Telephone: (416) 967-0148

Metropolitan Community Church of Toronto

Worship Services: Offices/Drop-In Sundays at 8 pm
Holy Trinity Church
10 Trinity Square
Evening 7:12 pm
Dress Line
364-9435

Church
(416) 9799

Teaching God's Love for You

Gary Drexler will

- Help plan your wardrobe
- Design and make Kaftans and lounge wear
- Advise on grooming

Consult - Gary Drexler Personal Aid Services

Dr. 335 e/o The Body Politic,
Box 7289, Station A
Toronto, Ontario M5W 1X9

Lesbian Autonomy and the Gay Movement

Wages Due Lesbians are a group of Toronto lesbian women who are part of Wages for Housework campaign. Wages Due did not send an official delegation to the Kingston Conference on the May 24th weekend. The following paper outlines their reasons for that decision and the need for lesbian autonomy within the gay movement.

From the time we are children our personalities, and therefore our sexuality, are molded to fit the unwaged work that capitalist society forces on women. We are trained to service others — men, children, the sick, the old — by denying our own needs and performing a free "service of love". This servitude is organized through the nuclear family and enforced on us by men. Because they have higher wages men have the power to command our work, including our sexuality.

Our sexuality, therefore, is anything but a "free zone" that we can determine at will. Any control we have over any areas of our lives we gain only through struggle. And we struggle against our struggle to be lesbian defies that discipline that would tie us to heterosexual relationships. Women's fight against dependence on men, against isolation from each other, against being able to have children only within the confines of the nuclear family, and against our poverty, are all struggles against the position of powerlessness that unwaged housework puts us in.

At the heart of our fight against unwaged housework is our rebellion against the heterosexual control of our sexuality that affects all of us whether we are lesbian or straight, female or male. As long as our sexuality is determined by unwaged servitude in the home and low paid servitude outside, the enslavement of those who enforce our work — men — is also guaranteed. The price men pay for their power over us is their own daily exploitation as wage slaves. Our dependence on them ensures their dependence on capital, and guarantees capital's control over us all.

To the degree to which women don't have sexual choices, men's choices are limited. One reason why gay men are so vilified is because the female identity is so bound up with dependence and weakness — with wagelessness — that gay men, in taking on female attributes, take on powerlessness, and subject themselves to some of the scorn usually reserved for women. Sexual liberation begins with women's refusal of housework, with our increased reclamation of our time, our energy, our bodies, our sexuality.

Lesbian women, therefore, are fighting for control over all our lives, in order to have sexual choices. We are not fighting for:

- 1) civil liberties only, e.g. equality with men or straight women, because what they have isn't good enough and they themselves are fighting for more.
- 2) a little world of our own (the lesbian ghetto) where we are isolated not only from men and straight women but also from the mass of lesbian women who are trapped in relationships with men by the same powerlessness that traps others of us in slums, female job ghettos, and childlessness.

And we are refusing to wait for the Left to construct its new world before we put ourselves and our own needs on the agenda. A society not based on our interests is based on someone else's interest in exploiting us.

We are part of an autonomous movement of women (the international Wages for Housework Campaign) whose fight for the recognition of all our capitalist work is the fight for the power to refuse the discipline of that work, especially the discipline of homosexuality. This struggle to build our power always means lesbian autonomy from those who have more power than we, including straight women, but above all from men, even gay men.

"We have heard from the Left, as well as the gay movement, about making common cause with the men, for 'human liberation'. But the obstacle to human liberation is precisely the power that the men have over us. The common cause of homosexuality, like the Left's call to the Black movement 'Black and white unite and fight', ignores the divisions between us and is an obstacle to overcoming those divisions.

The power differential between men and women that we experience everywhere in our society we also experience in the gay movement. Through our struggle we have gained a measure of independence from men, along with the possibility of living with other women. We don't want to forfeit that independence within the gay movement. We know that gay men think it's hard for them to "come out" on the job, but lesbian women have a hard time finding and keeping the lowest paid jobs even when we stay in the closet." And gay men who are in a crisis have men tends to turn to, which means more access to money, job possibilities, professional advice, etc., than lesbian women, who invariably turn to other women. It also means that many gay men choose to remain married to women, to be weekend homosexuals, out of convenience. Because their wages are higher they can afford to keep a house-slave on whom they depend for their daily reproduction. We stay in the closet — we are those house-slaves — because we cannot afford to leave. Leaving a marriage, for us, usually means leaving behind our children or the possibility of having children. For us — lesbian women, wages for housework means wages against heterosexuality and for lesbianism, against the power that all men have over us, both straight and gay.

We cannot say it enough: although men are also exploited by capitalism, they are the instruments of capital against us. Men will dominate us unless we are strong. They will use us as long as we are weak. We will be weak as long as we are not an autonomous force in both the women's and the gay movements. Only to the degree that we develop our own power will we be able to set the terms of the support that the men give us. When we aren't autonomous of men, we fail to undermine their power over us. When we are autonomous of men, we demonstrate how, in support of our fight for power, they gain power over capital.

We urge the gay movement to take a clear stand for lesbian autonomy. Unless we lesbian women can build our power we will always risk gay men building their power at our expense. Our fight is to end the system which commands our work by keeping us weak and penniless, and which defers our sexuality and our relationships with one another. Lesbian autonomy is a power in that struggle. And it is a power to all those, lesbian or straight, female or male, who are struggling against their own exploitation at the hands of the same system. □

... the difference between men's and women's wages is increasing. In 1971 the average man earned 25% more than the average woman. By 1973 it was 45%. The more, in Ontario in 1974, women waged workers earned $1 billion less than if they were men. 45 of all women below the age of 25 have annual incomes of less than $5000. Almost 50% of mother-led families had an income of less than $4,000. 22% of single fathered families had less than $4,000. A male head of family has a 5.3% chance of living below the poverty line. A female head of family has a 40% chance.

Wages Due Lesbians
P.O. Box 38, Station E
Toronto, Ontario

ASTROLOGY

is for gays, too.
Alcyone Counseling
964-0451
Member, Toronto Guild of Astrologers

MOUTH OF THE DRAGON

The Poetry Journal of Male Love
Subscriptions! $6.00 for four issues.
Box 107, Cooper Station, New York, NY 10003

The Polar Max

3801 N. Ocean Blvd.
 Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. 33308
 PHONE (305) 566-4376

Enjoy the Florida Fun and Sun in a friendly, informal atmosphere. Comfortable rooms and apartments. Your hosts are Pete and Ed.

marxism • women's liberation ireland • student movement history • latin america quebec • economics soviet union • southeast asia labour movement • native power china • gay liberation nationalism • imperialism middle east • philosophy black power • ison trotsky

Vanguard Bookstore

334 queen st. w.
near spadina
363-9618

"reading from left to left"

Glad Day
gay liberation bookstore

Open:
10 am - 9 pm
MT & Sat
10 am - 9 pm
Thurs & Fri
phone 561-4161

4 Collier St (at Yonge), Toronto

N.B.

GATE

Gay Alliance Toward Equality
163 Carlton St., Toronto, Ontario
M5A 2K7 964-0418

Change Of
for Venue

the GATEDANCES

Church Street Community Centre

519 Church Street
(north of Wellesley)

SAT, JULY 17 • 9:00

SAT, AUGUST 21 • 9:00

How one gay teacher discovered the frightening powers of the police and the courts.

Entrapment

by John Towndrow

He's in his forties now, owns a small business. The kind where you have to meet a lot of people - he's good at it, likes to talk, laughs easily, understands people's enthusiasms, finds it easy to share them.

John Towndrow is not his real name, but his story is true. It is a frightening story. Most of us will only hear about cases like John's. But all of us have to remember that entrapment is a weapon that the police always have at their disposal. It usually works. Most people plead guilty, pay their fine or serve their jail sentence, and then go about the business of trying to live with a criminal record. It's important to know that, like John, you can fight back. And win.

John is not completely out of the closet. His involvement in teaching has prevented that. But the circle of friends and acquaintances he's told has grown over the years. That probably made the difference between winning and losing. If no one at your job, or among your straight friends, or at your church knows you're gay, you stand alone when something like this happens. No one to vouch for your character in court, no one to turn to for financial help, no one to offer encouragement and reassurance. In the final analysis, the further you're out, the safer you are.

It happened over five years ago, but it could also happen tomorrow. Somewhere in Canada, it is probably happening today.

I now frequent these places less often (the libido decreases by the mid-forties). When I am there I am more discreet. I suspect the police have not yet changed their priorities.

The Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto was the locale, the Coliseum to be exact. Second floor, north wall, middle section, men's washroom. There was a large display on drug abuse in the adjacent gallery that summer. Since I was planning a lecture on drugs to high school students, I checked out the display first, then the can.

I remembered from a few years earlier that that particular washroom was somewhat active, had walls covered with years of wonderful graffiti, and had several square (2' large) 1' gilly holes at appropriate eye, crotch and lip level.

It was getting fairly late, past eight, and there was very little coming and going. But more graffiti had been added in the years since I had last been there, so I played musical stalls for a time.

About 8:30 I heard footsteps and someone entered the stall to my left. I could see (the hole was quite big) that he had on a windbreaker, casual slacks, and was quite husky. Soon he began playing lootsy beneath the partition - up and down, move an inch over, up and down. When his shoe crossed the invisible line separating our stalls, I reached down and pushed it back - no adverse reaction - part of the big come-on. Then he made some simulated jack-off movements. His trousers had not been lowered, so I could see nothing but the gentle joggling of his hand.

A quick glimpse of his face revealed a fairly handsome, mid-thirties, husky truck-driver type. By now I was aroused. He was undoubtedly aware of this. He began to beckon to me - a gesture that was clearly an invitation.

I stood up and later testified that I started to dress. He claimed that I moved towards the opening and actually started to put my penis through the gilly hole. A moment after I stood up, he was a loud pounding on the door of my stall - "Open up, you're under arrest!"

Some of the events recalled here are clear in my memory. Others are hazy or have been suppressed. I remember hesitating, being slow and reluctant to open the door. He was looking over the partition - obviously standing on the john. I think it was then that he showed me his badge. Or it may have been after I finally opened the door - I feared all the pounding and shouting might draw a crowd. I found myself face to face with his accomplice in entrapment - an older, less attractive man.

I was seized somewhat roughly, marched out of the can, down the back stairs, and into the deserted north lane. The first question I was asked - "Are you married?" - indicated to me that the behaviour they were later to allege I committed must be fairly common among married men. To this day I think if I had lied and answered "yes", I would have been released with nothing more than a tongue lashing. Or maybe an offer of release if they were privately accommodated, since, as we all know, many cops like having their cocks sucked too.

I was asked for identification. I handed over my wallet which he started to open, then quickly handed back for me to open. I showed them my driver's licence.

They were obviously not looking for a bribe.

It was now about 9 o'clock. The next six and a half hours were just the beginning of a six-month ordeal. First to the Canadian National Exhibition sub-station and an encounter with the arresting officer's superior - a short, stocky little "nazi" with a brush cut who looked at me with hatred and contempt. My belt was removed - no messy suicides, please. Was this routine, or had past experience indicated that an arrest by entrapment was so traumatic that a suicide might ensue?

I was placed in a cell by myself, though I was joined later by five young guys who had stolen some midway tickets. One boasted that as soon as the police learned who his father was they would all be released. That kid had certainly learned how our just society works. They were all sprung by eleven without the aid of a lawyer. They joked about the police report one had read in the outer office concerning some queer who had tried to give a cop a blow job. I wanted to tell them they had it backwards.

I started to feel faint and developed a cramp. A nice cop brought me some water and allowed me to go to the can. I had no sooner sat down on the john when I heard the rattle with the brush out rattle "where's the taggot?" and the door of the stall was yanked open. More venom, and I had to finish my messy shit while he watched.

Shortly after midnight I was handcuffed, led to the paddy wagon, and driven to the main police headquarters on College St. in order to pick up a kid who was so stoned he was incoherent and could hardly stand. Then over to Jarvis St. to be photographed and fingerprinted (one file for the local police, one for a copy to the RCMP, and one for the FBI. Scotland Yard doesn't count.) After this session (it was now about 2 a.m.), we left for Station 52.

The sergeant at the desk asked leading questions, and was annoyed that I panicked them.

"What was the other man doing?"

"What other man?"

"The one you were involved with."

"I wasn't involved with anyone."

"The man who was next to you."

"I don't know if anyone was next to me, and if there were I wouldn't know if it was a man or a woman."

"Come on now, you were in a men's washroom, weren't you?"

And so on.

When I asked to call a well-known, young civil rights lawyer I knew that their ears perk up.

"How do you know about him?"

"Through the New Democratic Party and his civil rights work."

I was not allowed to dial his number. A constable appeared to do so, but said he got no answer. At the time I didn't doubt he had dialed the number (I was still innocent in the ways of the police), but when I later heard the distortions in their courtroom testimony, I now doubt that he did.

I can't recall exactly when I was told what I was charged with. In preparing this account I could have sought out the court records but I preferred not to. Charges be damned! They almost always lay a double charge, one of which is an indictable offence - up to 5 years in prison. You're supposed to be willing to plead guilty to the lesser charge in return for their dropping the greater. I was charged with counselling to commit the indictable offence of gross indecency, and attempting to procure someone to commit an act of gross indecency.

I was finally flustered off to my modern, clean bare cell. I had just folded my jacket to make a pillow when the bail granting official arrived and asked me a few questions.

"Do you own your own home?"

"No."

"How long have you lived at your present address?"

"Three and a half years."

At 3:30 a.m. I was released on bail (personal bond) and staggered somewhat dazed into the cool hours of a late summer night. I waited what seemed an eternity for a taxi on west Dundas St., finally arrived home, gave the cabs some milk, climbed into bed at 4:15, and set the alarm for 8:15 had to be in court at 10.

The first court appearance was brief. The case was remanded until a later date. Was it at this appearance that I first pleaded not guilty?

I soon contacted the lawyer I hadn't been able to reach. He turned me over to his partner whose first question was "How much do you earn?" When I told him $15,000 he agreed to take the case but needed $750.00 down. He added that it would cost me between $1,000 and $3,000 depending on the outcome of the trial and whether there was an appeal. I should have told him I had only been earning a good salary for a year since three of the four previous years had been spent as an impoverished graduate student working on a doctoral thesis.

Entrapped...

I was afraid the whole thing would erupt in the scandal press, and that I would lose my job. The lawyer assured me that this was very unlikely. However, the next few weeks were filled with anxiety.

My lawyer instructed me to start seeing a psychiatrist. This was "necessary" so that if I were found guilty the court would be lenient. I phoned a psychiatrist I had seen some years earlier. But when he learned that it might involve a court appearance, he declined, not too graciously I might add.

I then thought of a local psychiatrist who had written a book on homosexuality. Anyone who had done that, must, I naively thought, be sympathetic to homosexuals. Although it was irregular with our referral, his receptionist booked me an appointment. When I met the psychiatrist and he learned I had been referred he was very annoyed.

When he further learned my reason for consulting him he was openly contemptuous, and said that if I was truly interested in being "cured," he would consider me as a patient after I got out of jail. After telling him I had obviously made a mistake, I thanked Dr. David Cappon for the 22 minutes of his time in which I later received a bill in excess of $50. (For those few who are unaware of Dr. Cappon's reputation, in the opinion of many he is undoubtedly Canada's most notoriously homophobic psychiatrist, and his book, Toward an Understanding of Homosexuality, is another pseudo-scientific attack on gay people. Ed.)

My lawyer finally put me on to a straight but sympathetic psychiatrist who was a big help over the difficult five months to follow.

The preliminary hearing took place in October. My lawyer didn't even show up until after the police testified and I had pleaded not guilty. I gave almost no consideration to plea bargaining - i.e. pleading guilty to the lesser charge in exchange for having the greater dropped. It was outrageous that the police would stoop to such tactics to make an arrest in a situation where no crime was committed or contemplated. I'm slow to anger, but for years I've been associated with Canada's socialist parties, the New Democratic Party, and its predecessor, the CCF. Both are parties with a history of opposition to police state mentality.

At my request my lawyer asked for a late date for the trial. It was set for early in the new year. I remember being annoyed to see my lawyer laughing and joking with the arresting officers and being reassured by him that such "friendliness" would pay off at the time of the trial - they would be more cooperative, less defensive, etc.

The next two months were especially difficult. At work, only one colleague, who would later testify, knew I had also told several of my closest straight and gay friends. But I decided not to tell my family - neither my aged parents nor my sister to whom I had never come out. I had only discussed homosexuality with her in reference to an obviously gay cousin. Her comment was, "It's awful, but it might have a homosexual in the family."

I had to have three character witnesses. Fortunately, a life-long friend was as outraged as I was. I had told her and her husband that I was gay some years earlier. She had three sons who liked and respected me, she was a high school teacher and therefore the ideal witness. She could not then (nor can she today) understand how anyone could annoy sex without emotional attachment. Sex in baths, parks, cars or theatres may not be first rate, and is certainly not the first choice for a lot of people, but it can be quite exciting.

The second character witness was my junior colleague at work - a stunning, sophisticated blonde-haired European, knew the kind of effort she would have on the jury. She would help establish my "heterosexual credentials," and as distasteful as that might have been to her, she had known for months that I was gay - "you don't respond to me as straight men?" We had had several "one-nighters" in the past, but I was reluctant to describe to her the circumstances of my arrest, but when I did so she accepted it without recrimination and readily agreed to testify.

The two men I chose included one of my best friends, but the lawyer decided against using him because he was unmarried and lived with his mother. The third witness was a United Church minister active in left-wing and civil rights causes.

One day I had to make a private detective the lawyer had hired for a photographic session. We went back to the scene of the alleged "crime," took some measurements and photos of the john. His witness was a United Church minister active in left-wing and civil rights causes.

One day I had to make a private detective the lawyer had hired for a photographic session. We went back to the scene of the alleged "crime," took some measurements and photos of the john. His witness was a United Church minister active in left-wing and civil rights causes.

I was shocked when one of the police testified that a young boy had rushed out in disgust shortly before they entered.

There was no such boy. I had been alone in that washroom for 10 or 15 minutes before they came in.

My lawyer and I discussed together several lines of defence. One of them, on the account the two officers gave at the preliminary hearing, I still find it curious that on one key point their testimony differed. And on one descriptive point, the officer who had acted as agent provocateur was clearly in error.

A week before the trial, the lawyer said he had to have his fee in full before the trial began. I scrounged around for the additional $1,000 - a total now of $1,750. He estimated that the trial would last 2 days.

To my surprise, one charge was dropped and a third was still on the day of the trial. I was astonished that this was allowed without any advance notice so that an appropriate defense could be prepared.

The surroundings in the new provincial courthouse were austere but impressive. I had elected trial by jury. I was present at the jury selection. No woman. The crown had the right to reject an unlimited number of prospective jurors. They rejected about 8 - all the young, long-haired ones or others with a career in an artistic field. My lawyer could reject three. He rejected two. This exercise in pre-trial bias over the proceedings began.

I looked about me. The usual courtroom scene. However, some of the court functionaries were obviously sympathetic, and at least one of the shorthand court reporters was gay. The crown attorney - young, and handsome. The judge was approaching middle age but still retained his good looks. Most of that first day was spent in description of events that were alleged to have taken place.

I was shocked when one of the police testified that a young boy had rushed out in disgust shortly before they entered. There was no such boy. I had been alone in that washroom for 10 or 15 minutes before they came in.

Some time was devoted to a definition of privacy. There was a lot of precedent citing and involved legalistic wrangling, and I don't see how it had any particular relevance to my situation. But the judge, crown attorney and my lawyer all enjoyed the ritual of dissecting precedents and confining on the points of law. Perhaps it enticed for them what would otherwise have been a routine, boring (and expensive to the taxpayer) case. It was intriguing that the good-looking arresting officer stated that he had known about those glory holes since he was a teenager in the nearby neighbourhood of Paradise. Had he volunteered for the money squad out of a decade of frustration?

The second day was given over to character witnesses. All were quite effective, though I was hurt and disappointed that my lifelong friend wore a wig - the only time I had ever seen her do so. My colleague looked terrific in a new ice-cream leotard. As we spoke, in fact, the lawyer insisted she come for the third unscheduled morning so that during the summing up she would be seen to have a continuing interest in the outcome of the trial.

It was on the second day that I was suddenly asked: "What is your opinion of homosexuality?" I don't know why the lawyer hadn't warned me of this possibility. I hesitated. Even my lawyer seemed surprised, but finally registered an objection. I had to leave the room. The objection was discussed. It was sustained, so I didn't have to answer.

One of the discrepancies in the two arresting officers' testimony was their description of events prior to the arrest. The one sitting in the john said his door was open so that the other standing at the urinal could see the head of a penis pass through the opening in the wall. The other said he strode over and yanked the unlocked door open. Why would their testimony differ in this instance?

The high (or low) point of the trial came with a description of my penis. The officer had said I was circumcised. Since I am not, and have a good covering of easily withdrawn foreskin, this was a point on which the jurors had to be convinced I was telling the truth. Did I urinate then and there? No. But my lawyer did open his file and pass around 8 x 10 glossies of my shirted but pantsless torso, and a second of a clossup of my limp but uncircumcised wrist. The outcome? I had been circumcised. And that was what the officers were either lying, exaggerating or confused. End of story? Not quite.

To counter the tensions of the previous six months I took a vacation in Morocco and Spain. I met 8 delightful young men in 9 days in Tangier, and in the now closed gay Festival Bar in the Hotel de Ville had a soldier's evening with a cop. How's that for a sure shock?

On my return, I found a registered letter from my lawyer with the intimidating heading: "Re: Counsel to Commit an Act of Gross Indecency," billing me for an additional $1,200, but "in view of the circumstances," he declared he would settle for $1000. We finally agreed on $500 more. I often wonder if there was any connection between his joking with the police, the convenient discrepancies in their testimony, and the additional $1000 I was asked for.

I was shocked when one of the police testified that a young boy had rushed out in disgust shortly before they entered. There was no such boy. I had been alone in that washroom for 10 or 15 minutes before they came in. Some time was devoted to a definition of privacy. There was a lot of precedent citing and involved legalistic wrangling, and I don't see how it had any particular relevance to my individuals who testified on my behalf or were prepared to do so.

What if I had been found guilty? In theory, I could have received a prison term of 5 years on the indictable charge, but I would more likely have been fined $500 or $1,000, been awarded with a criminal record, and lost my job.

I still feel the adrenalin flowing when I enter a cruisey car just as others do in bars, bars, parks or theatres. I know the idea of washroom sex is repugnant to some people, perhaps even more so than police antipathy.

Those who express disgust with washroom sex, believe that certain things occur relatively regularly: one, that gay people who want sex are there likely to press their attentions on men who simply use the facilities, and two, that the sexual acts themselves will be on view and will offend.

Both of the above do occur occasionally, and to the extent that both still offend a sizeable number of people, I feel that society has a right to impose sanctions. But the transgression ought to be a public one, a misdemeanour - similar to a parking ticket.

However, the overzealous homosexual pressing his attentions on the unwilling, and the glaringly public sex acts are only much less frequent. Most acts are physical love occur privately in the stalls, are over quickly and never come to the attention of anyone. It is usually quite clear that the law has no interest in just to use the facilities. When that is the case, he is not solicited, he is not touched.

There are enough willing people who come into a car to make such an imposition on the uninterested quite unnecessary.

Finally, a few dos and don'ts for your courtroom tipplers. If you get caught do not be ashamed. Do not admit to anything. Do not plead guilty to a lesser charge if they promise to drop the greater as a result. Do not plead guilty at all unless you've given the matter a great deal of thought and have discussed it with your lawyer. The legal fees necessary to fight the case may well cost you more than the fine you may lose if you pleaded guilty. But remember, a criminal record may affect your earning capacity for the rest of your life. Do get a good lawyer. Think of it as an investment. You are likely to suggest one who charges reasonable rates. "Do dress well and behave courteously in court (how else?). But don't get caught. That good-looking truck driver may turn out to be a good-looking but repressed, frustrated and not too friendly cop. □

(And remember - in Ontario legal aid is available and will pay lawyers' fees if you qualify.)

It happened to John over five years ago. But it still happens. The Body Politic received a call while this article was being typed. The caller was a distraught man with an almost unbelievable story.

He had been cruising West Beach in Toronto. An attractive guy was lounging behind the change booth. The guy was something not right about him though, "bad vibes," and Richard (not his real name) asked a direct question: "Are you a cop?" The man said no, he was a draftsman. A bit more conversation followed, during the course of which Richard was able to repeat his question and get the same response. Two denials.

Richard invited him to get into his car - it was a chilly day. He put his hand on the guy's knee. That was all that was necessary - he was arrested. The incident assault on a male. The cop's simple statement: "I can lie and I did."

Evidence elsewhere in this issue suggests that the police are cracking down on gay people across the country. Be extremely careful. But if you're entrapped, like John or Richard, be prepared to fight. Chances are, with a good lawyer, you'll win.

Our Image

The BP Review Supplement

Number 4

Toeing the Line

In search of the gay male image in contemporary classical ballet *

by Graham Jackson

The Ballet, 'Monument for a Dead Boy', was first performed in Amsterdam on June 19, 1965. Produced by the Dutch National Ballet, 'Monument' was the work of Rudi Van Dantzig, co-artistic director of the company.

'Monument' was one of the first ballets to deal with homosexual love. On a stage, empty but for some impressionistic, Noguchi-like set pieces, a young man, the title character, alternately stabs the air with his arms in what seems like a futile attempt to break free of his past, and doubles up in a foetal position while a flock of black-draped ladies hover near. This balletic agony is supposed to represent 'homosexual conflict', to borrow a phrase from one of the less enlightened reviewers.

I have not attempted to analyze the female image in contemporary ballet in this article. I feel that a woman should do that. There is certainly enough material to make such an analysis worthwhile.*

The boy it seems has been traumatized by a brutal display of parental coitus. He can't make it with a snaky seductress in blue; he feels dirty just thinking about it. He wants to go back to the days when he kissed a little girl among the hollyhocks, but his innocence is irrevocable and he turns to a young man for comfort. For this, the boy is taunted and gang-raped by a peck of schoolchums. With insult heaped upon injury, the boy kills himself — of course.

Van Dantzig's use of symbolic gesture in 'Monument' is vague enough to allow of several interpretations, but the above is the most popular one with the critics and, all benefits of the doubt aside, the most logical.

In 1965, 'Monument' was bold and daring. While it didn't garner rave reviews, the public and the critics treated it seriously. In early 1966, ballet critic

Peter Williams interviewed Van Dantzig in the British journal, Dance and Dancers, and reviewed 'Monument' as 'one of the most distinguished works to emerge from the mainland of Europe in many a long year'. Typical of the seriousness with which critics felt compelled to discuss 'Monument', Williams wrote: It would be a grave mistake to dismiss 'Monument for a Dead Boy' as something merely with a homosexual label. Admittedly homosexuality is touched on, it would be hard to create an honest work about adolescent mental confusion which didn't, but such suggestion is only a small part of the build-up of forces which can lead youth to a violent cross-roads — leading possibly to suicide. Where the depth of this document lies in its honest approach to the lack of care which can lead to the bruising of a tender and unformed mind — possibly beyond redemption.

After its first presentation in New York by the Harkness Ballet on November 2, 1967, Dore Hering, reviewer for Dance Magazine, didn't mince her words: she knew what 'Monument' was all about. 'Monument' is, quite simply, about how a homosexual gets that way," she wrote in her inimitable journal.

Although not as pussy-footing or sentimental as the British press, Hering and the New York critics tended on the whole to admire 'Monument' more than their overseas colleagues. 'Monument' had the gutsiness and, yes, the vulgarity that American dance critics eat up. The subject matter not only shocked them, it also titillated many of them. Men touching one another in a sensual way! How different from all those profligate girls in white tulle! The serious young men who had set through countless 'Giselles' and 'Swan Lakes', more interested in the boys in white tights than the prima's poutettes, look to championing 'Monu-

Our Image

Books Mass Media The Arts

What's in 'Our Image'?

As gay people, we see ourselves being portrayed by our culture in innumerable ways and in various media and art forms. The books by and about us proliferate; they need to be reviewed and analysed. The traditional forms of 'high' culture — art, music, dance, theatre — are beginning to incorporate gay themes or characters, with varying degrees of success. We should be assessing what they do. The mass media — the daily press, television, radio — reach millions. It is crucial that we monitor the coverage homosexuals receive there. Gay people are attempting to uncover our lost history and we want to share some of that research with our readers.

Contents

Feature:

"Toeing the Line", by Graham Jackson

Column:

"The Ivory Tunnel", Ian Young reviews small press books

Books:

After You're Out
The Fancy Dancer
A Lasting Relationship

Theatre

A Chorus Line

Contributors

Barry Adam is a doctoral candidate in sociology at the University of Toronto and a member of the Gay Academic Union.

Andrew Hodges, a native of England and co-author of the influential pamphlet With Downcast Gays, is a mathematician doing research at Syracuse University in New York State.

Graham Jackson is a Toronto writer. A collection of his short stories, Gardens, was recently published by Catalyst Press.

Gordon Montador, formerly from Vancouver, lives and works in Toronto.

Anton Wagner, 27, is dramaturge at the Playwright's Coop in Toronto.

Ian Young was one of the founders of the first Gay liberation organization in Canada, the University of Toronto Homophile Association. A well known poet, he lives in Scarborough, Ontario, and runs Catalyst Press.

Monument for a Dead Boy, Harkness Ballet, 1967. Helgi Tomasson in the principal role.

ment as the beginning of a new era in dance.

Pratt's story, Monument, was in the repertoire of two or three dance companies, and choreographers in the States and Britain were vying with one another to produce a ballet on a homosexual theme. But this was the era of 'The Boys in the Band' when the sentiment, 'Show me a happy homosexual and I'll show you a gay corpse', was a popular one and most of the offspring of 'Monument' were, as a result, lund and bleak.

In 1973, Monument was revived by the American Ballet Theatre (after the New York City Ballet, the most important company in New York). This time, however, the critics were not impressed. In fact, they reacted with a yawn. Even those serious young men who had made such a fuss on its first appearance now sniggered — after the polemics and the parades, who wouldn't? Van Dantzig's psychologizing seemed treacherous and often downright silly to them.

One of the most eloquent dance critics writing in the States today, Jack Anderson, summed up what he thought had happened to Monument in the eight years since its world premiere in these words:

What has caused 'Monument' to crumble is a shift in social attitudes. In 1967, its presentation of homosexuality started us. Since then, thanks to the sexual liberationists, we have become slightly less self-conscious in our discussion of sexual matters. Monument survives from a period in which, possibly to mollify the prudish, an artistic representation of homosexuality had to have a slightly whining tone and an obligatory unhappy ending.

What then can the National Ballet of Canada be thinking of when, just this year, it added 'Monument' to its repertoire? It has often been said that we are culturally a few years behind the U.S., but this is ridiculous.

The acid-penned critic for The Globe and Mail, Lawrence O'Toole, praised the National's production, but called the ballet 'a slow ache.' William Litterer of The Star also drubbed 'Monument' for being clichéd and boring.

Who decided to include 'Monument' in the repertoire? Is this decision a significant comment on the director's classical ballet is taking in this country? Is this as daring as the National wants to get in its belated treatment of homosexual love?

To try to understand this thinking that prompted yet another production of 'Monument', I talked to Peter, one of the major dancers in Van Dantzig's work here. Although I didn't get answers to all the questions, I learned a lot.

Graham: Why Monument?

Peter: The company wanted a work by Rudi Van Dantzig. 'Monument' was the obvious ballet. It really didn't have anything to do with the subject matter.

G: Whose decision was it — ?

P: David Haber (former artistic director) was responsible for getting the work.

G: How would you describe 'Monument'?

P: It's about a young man who's on the verge of deciding whether to go on or whether not to go on. In the ballet he basically goes over his past life. I won't go into specifics about each of the relationships he has but in order to go on, he has to leave his youth behind him, he has to break away from, say, the girl in blue, the girl in white, and his youth completely. As far as I'm concerned, the boy does break away.

G: Then you don't think the ballet is really about homosexuality?

P: I never saw it as being a homosexual ballet. Originally I did, then I found out that it really wasn't about that. The relationship with the boy is an important aspect of his life, but whether there was actually any homosexual relationship isn't clear in the ballet. He (Van Dantzig) didn't want to make any points.

What puzzled me the most was Peter's initial refusal to recognize the obvious, i.e., the homosexual content of the ballet. Was this a personal evasion, I wondered, or was he merely toying the party line? If he were straight, then his interpretation of 'Monument' would be understandable if not acceptable. But Peter is gay, as he confessed to me later on.

Gerald Apple of the Jeffrey, a 'mid-town, mid-city' company

We had been talking about the possibility of trying out a gay ballet at the National's annual workshop in Toronto, a forum for the choreographic talent of the company's dancers, when he opened up:

G: Would you be interested in doing a gay ballet?

P: I'm really leaving it open now.

(Pause.) When I do ballets about sex that involve something between a man and a woman, I really don't know what I'm talking about and I can only do it as something between two men as I know it. So it's always there if you know me.

My obvious rejoinder would have been, 'Well, why don't you do a pas de deux for men?' but Peter seemed so used by the notion of presenting a gay ballet, fearful of repercussions from the almighty board of directors, which might affect his career as dancer and choreographer, that I forbore saying anything. In fact, I already knew the answer to my

Edward Villella: "a question of music"

G: Do you think the ballet is dated?

P: I don't think it's dated. Ten years ago the thing that stuck out about Monument was the fact that there was a homosexual relationship in it. What people termed a homosexual relationship. There actually is a homosexual relationship, I will admit that. One out of three relationships is gay.

unspoken question.

When, at the end of the interview, he requested that I not use his real name, I realized that there was something more rotten in the state of ballet than 'Monument' for a Dead Boy, that the latter was just a symptom of a much larger problem.

the contrast between a male and a female form is more interesting in terms of line, etc., than that of two male forms. It is noteworthy that these dance aestheticians don't make the same remarks about two female forms. They ingly gay," Mazo proclaims. He has his theories about the discrepancy between principals and corps, and they're dandies.

The principals are a good deal older than the boys in the corps and less often in male dances at the theatre. As they matured, as dancers and as men, they very well may have put away youthful attachments — if they even had them — and gone on to make their peace with women and enjoy it. Another explanation for the smaller number of gay men in the higher echelons of the company is that a homosexual dancer, if effeminate, who allows his homosexuality to dominate his dancing is unlikely to become a superior performer. A homosexual dancer, effeminate or virile, who allows his homosexuality to dominate his life also is unlikely to become great.

While we grant Mazo his point that an effeminate dancer will not make a very convincing Siegfried or Albrecht, he should realize that there is more to male dancing than dancerly noble roles — as the repertoire of the NYCB itself testifies.

There is room for both the macho dancer and the dainty dancer as well as for something in between, something little appreciated in North America, the androgyne. The Royal Ballet in England abounds with androgynous dancers; in fact, one of the best male classical dancers performing today, Anthony Powell, is androgynous in both appearance and technique. When Mazo throws this term 'effeminate' around, he means obviously can't come to grips with.

Another interesting point in Mazo's explanation is that homosexual dancers must repress their homosexuality if they are to become great and, more specifically, successful dancers. What about heterosexuals? Doesn't it interfere with the progress of the dancer?

Apparently not. Mazo doesn't ask Edward Villella to cut down on his butch act — in fact, Villella has made a career out of it — but he chastises the kids in the corps for camping it up! This is just the sort of sanctimonious double standard that paralyzes talented dancers like Peter from developing a personal dancing style reflective of their characters, limits the range of male dancing severely, and successfully keeps people thinking of artistic endeavour and sexual expression as totally alien, incompatible facets of human experience.

Another dancer critic, the omnipresent John Gruen, who has probably lawned over everyone worth fawning over in his time from dancers to poets, starts a picture complementary to Mazo's in his book The Private World of Ballet. The book is a compendium of interviews starring the legends, new stars, would-be and has-been, of the ballet world.

With the exception of a joint interview with dancers Anton Dolin and John Guran who have been 'friends' for years, most of the interviews turn out to be a paean to straight marriage and 'normalcy'.

Reading Gruen's book, one wonders how the stereotype of the 'top' dancer ever arose — you can just see them all stewing about the mortgage and the baseball pennant — and that's probably just what Gruen and his interviewees wanted Gruen's presentation of dancers as just plain-folks has serious implications for ballet as an art form.

What Gruen and Mazo are doing, whether they realize it or not, is selling ballet as a commodity to a public tired of violence and 'depravity' in plays and movies, a public eager for escapist entertainment. They don't sell ballet as it might be, they don't chart the future of ballet as a road leading somewhere; they flog 'Coppelia' and 'Swan Lake' instead. Concomitant with this sort of entertainment is a wholesome, 'normal' image for the dancer.

An intelligent critic like Oleg Kereny (grandson of the Kerenyky who writes for The New Statesman, The Daily Mail, and occasionally Gay News), is sad to say, in the minority. Although a trifle snippy in his approach to the question of male sexuality in ballet, his views are far more rational than those of his American counterparts.

Although sex is now openly discussed and portrayed in the theatre, cinema and literature, there still lingers a relic of the idea that it is in some way improper for a man to flaunt his sexuality. A woman making herself as glamorous and appealing as possible is regarded as normal; a man doing the same thing is not. Just as some people still object to men using perfume or wearing jewellery, so they find it difficult to accept the idea of men in tight, displaying their figures for the admiration of an audience... Many great male dancers have been bisexual or entirely heterosexual, married and fathers of families... But it is equally true that many... male dancers, including Nijinsky, have been bisexual or homosexual. (Ballet Scene, London, Hamish-Hamilton, 1970)

What is more important in Kereny's comments is the purpose behind them — which I see as an educative one — rather than the comments themselves — which are true, certainly, but not deep. Kereny has few allies in this fight but a handful of concerned, insightful ballet-goers. Gruen and Mazo not only have public prejudices working for them or rather with them, they also have a large number of male dancers whose aim in life seems to be convincing the masses — and possibly themselves — that ballet dancing is a masculine activity.

Foremost among these dancers is Edward Villella of the NYCB who has taken his act into the high school gym to show the boys that anything they can do

Anton Dolin...

Classical ballet is conservative and tradition-bound, its language is very formal. Only choreographers with the stature and genius of George Balanchine can tamper with the language without undue censure.

At the 1974 Gala Opening of the Harkness Ballet in its new home near Lincoln Centre in New York, the company gave a work by Vicente Nebreda called Percussion for Six Men which allowed some of the company's best male dancers to display their versatility. In one segment, a dancer performs on pointe. This apparently shocked the critics for, as everyone knows, pointe work belongs in the realm of the female dancer. A man never dances on pointe unless he's playing a special character role as Anton Dolin did in 1926 when he created a mild sensation dancing on pointe as the dandy in Nijinsky's balletic adaptation of Moliere's Les Facheux. But for a male dancer to perform on pointe in an abstract ballet where there's no story to excuse it, that's unforgivable!

A typical reaction to Nebreda's Percussion for Six Men was supplied by the resident dance critic for Time magazine, John T. Elson:

One soloist performs a legato variation delicately poised on lippy-toe. The display might have been aesthetically more attractive had he been a girl, or had the performance taken place at the Continental Baths.

This type of smug reportage is not unique in ballet criticism. I think it is the highly physical, often erotic nature of the art that brings out a critic's defensiveness.

Ballet is all about bodies, bodies in motion, about line and curve and bulge, about arms and legs and backdrops, as much as it is about princes and swans. There's no escaping it, although many holy insist that to talk of ballet as physical and erotic is to demean the art. What is at work here is obviously the age-old dilemma of integration: is sexuality something one keeps carefully apart from the other activities one engages in like eating, bathing, thinking, dancing, or even appreciating dance, or should it be integrated naturally into the fabric of human experience? Obviously critics like Elson subscribe to the former modus operandi and as a result are offended when ballet is too explicitly sexual or erotic.

The classical dance aesthetic is obviously also a straight aesthetic. It is for the most part about the interaction of man and woman, most of the time in sexual or erotic terms. Men are allowed to dance together only in certain stereotyped relationships, as rivals for the same woman for example, or in athletic displays of oneupmanship. If, as some people in dance have objected, the dance aesthetic has to do with bodies as instruments and not with socially-defined gender roles, then why, I ask, is there still a hesitancy to juxtapose male bodies on stage in certain attitudes.

The answer, irrational as it is, is that

...and John Gilpin: "long-time companion"

know that Balanchine has proved time and again, in ballets, like Serenade and Concerto Barocco, that women dancing a pas de deux can create a very beautiful rapport. In a society accustomed to see women as innately prissy and 'fey', this is not offensive. The same society does not recognize gentleness, either in movement or feeling, as being masculine qualities, let alone the basis of male interaction; and it is this unspoken dictum that dance critics and aestheticians are unconsciously observing.

The result of all this is that a ballet featuring a man dancing on pointe, or, what is infinitely more daring, two men dancing together in a lyrical or erotic manner, unless backed by big money and an audacious artistic administration, is bound to be short-lived.

One of the most conservative views of ballet and the role of the male dancer comes from Joseph H. Mazo, dance critic for Women's Wear Daily, in his book Dance Is a Contact Sport. Mazo spent a season (1973-74) absorbing all aspects of the NYCB. Some of his discoveries are interesting and nearly always amusing. For example, he decides that 'ballet is about sex', but not just any sex: ballet is about the penis-vagina variety. He doesn't have much more than that to say about ballet as an art form. He prefers to concentrate on back stage ballet, on the personal lives of choreographers and dancers: what they drink, how they dress, what they ball, areas of activity which are very important to a public still somewhat suspicious of the art.

If anyone had doubts about the masculinity of male dancers, Mazo lays them all to rest, or at least most of them. Calculating the number of gay dancers compared to the number of straight, he arrives at a reassuring figure: six of the eight principal male dancers in the NYCB and about half the soloists are 'precising' (and one assumes, believing) heterosexuals.

The boys in the corps, however, are another story: 'overwhelm-

Dermel Barnett and Christopher Aponte (left) in Nebreda's homoerotic 'Gamin'

Our Image

in free-form gymnastics, he, as a ballet dancer, can do with more control, precision, and style. This routine, which has lately been preserved on film, ostensibly proves that ballet isn't silly. Needless to say, the boys run right out and buy ballet slippers.

Six years ago in an issue of Dance Perspectives (#40) devoted to an examination of the male image in ballet, Igor Youskevitch, former principal dancer with the American Ballet Theatre and celebrated partner of the Cuban ballerina, Alicia Alonso, described what he thought male dancing was all about:

When man lifted his first stone he knew why he was doing it. Reason has always been the basis of his dance innovation. He did not dance for the sake. He danced for the gods, for success in war and hunting, for a mate. There was always a purpose in his dance, reflecting his masculine inclinations to lead, to go forward, to achieve. Civilization does not change basic masculine nature; it develops progressive images of the man-hero. A man must keep in his dance the seeds of this heroic nature.

For the female, a dance does not need to have a meaning. As long as she feels herself a woman she can use her inborn qualities to give life and excitement to her movements. But as long as a man has no reason for his dancing he tends to drift into feminine interpretation.

Four other dancers were asked to contribute their impressions about the male dancer's image. Bruce Marks thought masculinity was a question of 'weight,' of keeping close to the earth, of aggressiveness. Vilella thought it was a question of muscle. Of the lot, only Luis Fuente, formerly of the City Centre Joffrey Ballet, offered the only sensible and non-sexist opinion:

We don't need to get a headache thinking about how to look masculine. A man always is a man, and you don't have to build muscle to show it. When you dance you show what is true of you as a person. It comes very easily. You just do the movements, very freely. When I am dancing I am not thinking how to show I am a man: I am dancing to show the audience how a dancer dances.

Is it any wonder that amid all this silly talk about masculinity, many serious dance lovers switched their allegiance from classical ballet to modern, avant-garde, and experimental forms of dance. To many, it seemed that choreographers working in a modern idiom — like Paul Taylor, Louis Falco, Lar Lubovitch, and Twyla Tharp — were comparatively unconcerned with questions of male-female polarization. Most of them preferred a more androgynous dancer. (Tharp in fact often creates movement that can be danced by male or female interchangeably without any alteration in the steps.) And yet for all this, there have been few dead-on confrontations with homosexual themes.

In Canada, where classical ballet is fairly traditional, modern dance troupes like the Toronto Dance Theatre, Entre-Six, and Le Groupe de la Place Royale have proved more adventuresome. They have each briefly explored the dance possibilities of homosexuality.

Jean-Pierre Perrault, co-artistic director of Le Groupe, is like Louis Falco, self-avowedly gay. But whereas Falco subscribes to a cooler, bisexual lifestyle, Perrault is unabashedly militant. It is all the more unfortunate that his militancy hasn't touched his work in a more significant way.

What interests Perrault is not 'content' or 'message', but production technique, a term which here means a mélange of bizarre lighting effects, slide projections, and electronic sound as well as an abstruse experimentation with space that passes for 'content'. But Perrault is not alone, his interests are reflected in the repertoire of several modern dance companies, with the result that the dancer, as performer, becomes an entirely mechanical, senseless object.

Right now the public and, to some extent, the media are clamouring for a return to 'normalcy' in all the arts. The theatre queues in New York and London are for revivals. My Fair Lady, Furber and Kaufmann's The Royal Family, Ben Travers' farces, and musical revues. At the same time, ballet is beating a hasty retreat over territory just recently won, territory which is just a scrap when you look at it.

In order to be able to expand the accompanying list, we would have to have a revolution challenging the very aesthetic on which dance and arts like painting, sculpture, photography — arts which long ago lost their human body — are founded. This revolution is not likely to come from the 'straight' dance-makers. It's possible that women might start it, but so far classical choreography has been a male-dominated field.

A sizable number of these men are gay — if the exact number were known, I'm sure it would be staggered. They were initially attracted to ballet because of its ambivalence, its latent homosexual potential, and yes, its reputation for being a sanctuary for 'eggots'. Once in' however, they become very self-protective, very conservative; they are careful not to jeopardize their position with critics, public, or management by being too blatant; an old-boy network is established to ensure the status quo. It's a fairly familiar pattern, one that happens in most of the arts at some time or another, but in classical ballet, which has a history of conservatism, the result is quite simply stagnation. The very men who should be at the head of this 'cultural revolution' are busy making pretty dances for girls in tutus claiming all the while that one's personal and creative lives must be kept separate — for the sake of the art!

When Peter described to me how he went about choreographing a male-female pas de deux, I wondered if he realized the dishonesty of such an approach:

G: Is the reason you choose to present a man and a woman rather than a man and a man because of your audience?

P: Yes, usually.

G: Is that a true expression of yourself, do you think?

P: Yes. If you try something between a man and a man, you're saying a whole other thing and audiences aren't ready for that yet. It's the audience that tells us what to do.

Jorge Donn, of Bejart fame

Attractive, articulate, and very talented. Peter is also — like the men mentioned above — somewhat of an opportunist. His opportunism must be seen, though, as part of his fear of coming out in creative terms. In the end, he will only cut his own throat: he has abundant choreographic talent but a deliberately limited vision — the combination is not a healthy one.

On such cases as Peter rest the mettle task of realizing a new facet of the dance aesthetic only slothfully or covertly explored heretofore.

The ballet audience, a great bulk of which is gay, is no help to them. Gay ballet-goers consent to support countless repetitions of the grand old classics without complaint. They don't demand anything more doing than Les Ballets Trockadero de Monte Carlo, a drag ballet with a lethal gift for satirizing romantic, classical, and neo-classical styles of dance.

One might suspect that for many gay balletomane, ballet is a retreat into a fantasy world too, one in which they can covertly ego the boys and all the same time live in a pretty world where they think they always wanted to inhabit, but from which they are banned by virtue of their sexual proclivities. This might seem to some an unflattering, exaggerated picture, but it is one that is too often true.

Gay people have never been too vocal about what they want to see in the theatre or on the movie-screen. To make a "revolution" possible, they would have to be willing to sponsor, finance and support — in terms of their attendance — companies that dare to challenge the established dance aesthetic and produce gay ballets, ballets that feature men doing beautiful, delicate, lyrical, sensual, erotic things — together! Only then will there be any noticeable change. Only then will other companies realize the importance of the gay ballet-goer and the gay choreographer. Until that time, we're stuck with the syph, the swan, the doll with the china-blue eyes, and pseudo-expressionist crack like "Monument for a Dead Boy." □

The Homoerotic in Ballet: a partial list

With classical ballet on a crusade to bring in the unconquered by means of lavish revivals of the old war horses, and modern dance making an increasingly arcane movement language to express spiritual conundrums, there is not too much of current interest to those seeking a dance expression of gay sensibilities.

Most of what there is dates from the early 70's; most belong to a hybrid of classical ballet and modern dance, the type of ballet popularized by companies John Rockefeller called "mid-cue," i.e., New York, "mid-cue."

What follows is a list of some important, representative works in this focus, however peripherally, however briefly, on the dynamics of male-male interaction, whether it be sexual in a larger sense, or purely erotic.

Ballets which contain pas de deux (or trios) for men as part of the larger work:

Men not including in this section male pas de deux (etc.) that are nothing more than set-piece displays such as we get in Gerard Arpino's Olympics or in the Sauter/Galco movement of his Katzenjanz.
The Goldberg Variations (1971) — Jerome Robbins

Rizzbins, New York City Ballet. Set to Bach's music, this ballet by the West-Side-Story man features a large ensemble of dancers who start out in practice clothes, but don esophren in century gear as the dancing progresses.
American correspondent for Dance and Dancers, Patricia Blanes described the male pas de deux in these words:

One particularly striking section for four dancers, two boys and two girls, stands out. The two boys (Bryan Pitts and David Richardson) dance together, watched by the two girls and when they relax, the two girls dance. In The Record, Emory Lewis wrote: "Robbins hints at the differing ways of love with artful nuance." So beautifully... apt that I cannot resist quoting him.

Wewies (1971) — Margot Sapington, City Centre Joffrey Ballet. A sex-character ballet, the first section of which is danced by two men. The male pas de deux is sexually suggestive, although Ms. Sapington observed when Time magazine called the final clinch "homoerotic."

Some reviewers said this two-man sequence was homosexual. I feel they are wrong about that, because people who think that have homosexuality on the brain. They think that people would come down the street and try to pick out somebody who was homosexual. If I'd meant it to be a homosexual relationship, I'd have said it. In spite of Ms. Sapington's paranoia — the sequence according to her was about her husband's relationship with his best friend — her choreography for men is both and right.

Mutations (1971) — Grant Tietel, Nederlands Dans Theater. Music by Karlheinz Stockhausen. The ballet is divided into four parts, each with three filmed introductions. While the dances on stage group and regroup into incredibly intricate, erotic patterns, film projections on a screen behind, explores the body and its movements in living, lingering detail.

The big brochure that surrounded the North American premiere of the ballet (1972) was directed at the three love movements which were danced in the nude. One of these movements was for three nude men. In yet another sequence, three of nude men slipped their pants on one another's bodies, which they smeared in by rubbing together. One reviewer desecrated to redeem all this flagrant eroticism wrote:

It could suggest rather special sexual games. But such a suggestion is quickly banished by the purity and the integrity of what Tietel and his dancers have wrought. (Glenn Logie, Dance Magazine, Feb., 1971)

The Rite of Spring (1974) — Hans Van Manen, Dutch National Ballet. Stravinsky's music and libretto have been used countless times and Van Manen is certainly not one of the most inventive interpreters of the score, but he has choreographed a very lovely, tender sequence for two boys to the section sometimes called "The Dance of the Adolescents."

Another interesting feature of Van Manen's version is the costuming. The men are clothed in the briefest of briefs. The women in ugly body stockings draped with what look like plant tendrils. Shifting the focus of sexual attention from sexual male to womanly elements in other ballets by Van Manen, notably Grosse Fuge (men in black body stockings and white latex) as well as works for the more radical Nederlands Dans Theater.

Also of note:
Les Femmes d'Alger (1969) — Roland Petit, National Ballet of Canada.
Les Fleurs du Mal (1971) — Maurice Bejart, Ballet du XXe siècle.
Four Songs (1971) — Lucio Massine, New York City Ballet. The choreographer is the son of Leonide.
Les Femmes d'Alger (1972) — Marc Vilsa, Pacific Ballet.

Double Exposure (1972) — Joe Layton, City Center Joffrey Ballet. A pop version of Oscar Wilde's The Picture of Dorian Gray.

Ballets that deal primarily with a homosexual or lesbian relationship:

The Wedding Present (1962) — Peter Darnell, Western Ballet Theatre. A kitchen-sink ballet. Prefaced with the quote: "Love is not love which alters when it alteration finds," it tells the story of a new marriage that disintegrates when the bride finds out about her husband's former homosexual relationship with a young friend. This discovery, believe it or not, drives her to nymphomania.

Set in the sonnet tradition of a cheap rooming-house, the ballet is a stum-and-drink affair, but one that avoids the clichés and sentimentalism suggested by the plot.

Of Darnell's more recent work, The Scarlet Patience (1978) for the Scottish Ballet Theatre, reveals a marked gay sensibility with out using an explicitly gay situation. With a perverse art nouveau decor and costumes modelled on Beardsley's designs, the story tells of a jaded nobleman and his hedonistic courtiers in search of new pleasures. For the nobleman, they come in the form of a male prostitute, a cast created for Margot Fonteyn.

Death in Venice (1973). Opera in two acts and seventeen scenes by Benjamin Britten, libretto by Myklos Jancz, choreography by Sir Frederick Ashton. Everybody knows the story of the aging writer who is obsessed by the beauty of a young Polish boy vacationing with his family in plague-ridden Venice — thanks to Luciano Visconti.

The boy in Britten's operatic version neither sings nor sings his part. He dances it. In the American version at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, Tadzio was danced by Bryan Pitts from the New York City Ballet who was a featured dancer in the male pas de deux in The Goldberg Variations and Les Femmes d'Alger. As a stage presence — I have seen him in Balanchine's Square Dance — he is remarkably amputated. Too Tolbian in his review of Ashton's choreography for the opera, wrote of Pitts: He is lovely to look at, not just for the prettiness of his face and body (a flower-like face, with flowing cornsilk hair, a small, almost perfectly molded, dancer's body, fluently articulated legs and feet), but even more for the infinite sweetness of his coordination, which produces phrases of exquisite lyricism.

Gemini (1972) — Vicente Nebrada, Harkness Ballet. Perhaps the most unashamedly homoerotic pas de deux ever choreographed for male dancers. French critics were ecstatic in praise and the company toured France in the summer of 1973. Jerome LeMaire of NAD magazine described the work in the inimitably florid way of the French: Deux corps féminins de la même nature, conduisant leur harmonie, non sur des différences apparentes mais sur des similitudes, l'un effleuré soudain une sorte d'hétéro-tecle, de l'autre. Voile l'oblation infinie des amants grêes, la longue chaîne de la reconnaissance, l'homosexualité lumineuse, sans outrage ni blessure, l'homosexualité fondamentale et impassible.

Gemini was also given at the Gala Opening of the new Harkness Theatre in April 1974.

Gemini is a pas de deux for two boys set to the brief but eloquent adagio set by Maurice Ravel's Symphony. Unusually evoking homosexual love, the bodies of the two men twine and curve around each other. Numerous lifts are used but I found it more than made up for by the grace of the Aponte and (Darnell) Barnett brought a control and strength to their movements that prevented their work from descending to sentimentalism or sentimentality.

Only one dissenting opinion, John Fraser, former dance critic of The Globe and Mail, described the ballet as "an embarrassing homosexual pas de deux."

Although beloning somewhat to the athletic dance of the 1950's, Pursuing (Pursuing for Six Men) is interesting for the presing narcissism of the movement and the dancers' provocative courtship of the audience.

The Males (1957) — Herbert Ross, Ballet Theatre Workshop. Based on Genet's play, Les Femmes d'Alger and as Genet wanted them acted — by men.

Ballets that are essentially homoerotic, but pretend to be something else:

Chant du compagnon errant (1971) — Lucio Massine, Ballet du XXe siècle. People either love Bejart or they hate him, but either way he is probably the most-discussed ballet choreographer in the world. Massine's work covers the most attractive and energetic of any ensemble since the Ballets Russes.

Chant is a male pas de deux fashioned after the talents of Ruzhicki and Paolo Bonolis, ostensibly about a wanderer mooning over a lost love. Nureyev danced the wanderer and Bonolis — not his first love — the embodiment of his hopes and fears — or so we're given to understand. The only good thing about works of this sort is their vagueness: one can make of them what one wants.

Chant is Bejart work showing a marked gay sensibility in his celebrated Nijinsky, Clown de Dieu. We see Nijinsky, the man (a Parisian) who is the lover of a woman (a Russian) who is the much-admired Guy Durrin) going mad, surrounded by hallucinatory representations of his old dance roles: the Faun, the Spectra de la Rose, etc. etc. Bejart, Nijinsky's mentor, is depicted as a paper-mache monster forcing him to dance through hoops and over a wire, as the person who makes it all bearable. Repulsive, spectacular, but pretentious and tasteless. Not to mention homophobic.

The Relativity of Icarus (1974) — Gerald Arpino, City Center Joffrey Ballet. Arpino's ballets have always made great use of male dancers — which probably explains the rage gay following of the Joffrey company for whom Arpino is artistic director and resident choreographer.

Icarus has two men costasibly impersonating the mythic figures of Daedalus and Icarus and a woman as the Sun. According to the few admiring reviews:

The ballet deals with the nature of human freedom by describing the cycles of growth of the human spirit.

(Richard Philp, Art, March, 1975)

Of course, what it really is about is two men dancing. Icarus is a very lovely, very erotic choreographic study. If they are supposed to be in fact father and son there is no discrepancy discernable in age to make this believable.

The eva-Lucio Anderson wrote: Noting the scanty costumes and body-sculpting possibilities, some reviewers note that it really involves a conflict between heterosexual and homosexual desires. But, surely, the fact that a choreographer has made two dancers touch each other does not automatically make the encounter homosexual, does it? On the other hand, if Arpino specifically wishes to present ambivalent sexual desire, is he not being cowardly by hiding this intent behind the facade of the Daedalus and Icarus myth? Unable to clarify his subject on the literal level, Arpino blurbs its allegorical significance. There is also an oddity by the way, in the choreographer Lucas Hoving, which is a staple in the repertoire of several U.S. companies. It utilizes the same three characters, although adhering more closely to the myth.

David and Goliath (1975) — Robert North and Wayne Sleep, London Contemporary Dance Theatre. Not ballet, but a piece in the Martha Graham tradition, this is a choreographic collaboration of the two dancers who took on the principal roles in its premiere last November in London.

One senses again that legend, this time Biblical, has been used to disguise what is essentially homoerotic in the work. Although the creators obviously had something more in mind than a straight re-telling of 1st Samuel, 17.

The choreographers have introduced an earlier encounter between shepherd and lion, and a dramatic and otherworldly psychological and dramatic relationship. It is not simply that Goliath becomes strangely reluctant to do battle with David, but that their usual roles of pacifier and aggressor become almost completely reversed as a result.

Good Gooden in Dance and Dancers, Jan. 1976)

Some other Biblical allusions which serve as opportunities for getting men together in a dramatic and otherworldly relationship are: Vicente Nebrada's Cain; another Cain-Abel ballet by Toronto Dance Theatre; and Norman Wayne's Jacob and Esau wrestles with an angel (remember?) □

Oberon Press presents
eleven new stories by

David Watmough

"Love & the Waiting Game"

Available from Glad Day Books
4 Collier Street
(at Yonge)
Toronto

Paperback - $3.95. For mail orders please add 30¢ for postage.

Mrs. Farrell's Reading Studio
Card & palm readings
All readings confidential Open from 7 to 7 daily. Call for appointments. 598-0085.

New from

CATALYST

CANADA'S GAY
PUBLISHERS

GARDENS
by Graham Jackson

Two men, meeting at the funeral of a third who had loved them both, try to find their way into each other's life. This & ten other short stories. $3.95

PASS THE POISON SEPARATELY
A New Mystery
by Oswald Blackston

The latest black comedy by the celebrated English poet & novelist, author of over my garden. $2.95

COMMON-OR-GARDEN GODS
by Ian Young

A new full-length collection by the widely-published Canadian writer who has been called "the finest gay poet in North America". $3.95

TWENTY NINETEEN POEMS & ROSE EMISIONS
by Gavin Cliford

Poems of youthful yearning, whimsy, pain & delight sensuous visions "redolent from berries crushed between the teeth". each $2.00

Available from CATALYST, 315 Blythe Ave.
Scarborough, Ont. Canada M1N 2S6

For your Apartment Cleaning weekly, bi-weekly or monthly call Duke Housekeeping Services
(416) 961-9467

Our Image

Books

After You're Out Personal Experiences of Gay Men and Lesbian Women

Karla Jay and Allen Young (eds)
Links, 1975, $5.95

This is a warm-hearted, generous book.
It is aptly titled - it suggests the pause the stillness that follows any of the great crises of life, and coming out of the closet is certainly one of those. That momentous exit into life was not casual -
- and much of the rhetoric that one act generated was sometimes a bit intolerant, a bit impractical, a bit misapplied.
After you're out you have to stop and take stock of things, see what's happening in your own life, ponder what's happening in the lives of your friends and lovers, evaluate the forces that are at work in "the movement". Some of what you once said no longer seems to quite fit. And if you're going to survive, you're going to have to change.

That, of course, demands a growing and elastic ideology. After You're Out does not pretend to provide that; it is more concerned with the survival of the people who are finally going to elaborate that ideology. "An underlying assumption of this work is that aside from any organizational efforts by gay people - and we support such efforts - there must be a realistic and clearly understood notion of survival by gay people - by individuals, by couples, and by groups."
The book is divided into three sections: "Identity and Lifestyles", "Survival in a Hostile World", and "Creating Community and Helping Ourselves". There are 18 pieces by men, 18 by women and a short legal guide for gay people produced by the Chicago Gay People's Legal Committee - the specifics of which do not apply, of course, to Canadian gays but the generalities are helpful.

"Identity and Lifestyles" is the most "personal" of the three sections, and as a result contains a mixture of the most easily accessible, most moving writing and pieces of a finally invidious and sensational nature. "Entries in a Journal" by Gary Alinder is a bit painful because it is so self-consciously an attempt at the genre of the "ansy journal", and doesn't tell me much about gay people except that they travel and can make reasonably intelligent comments about the places they visit and the people they meet. But we do get Nina Sabaroff's wonderfully good humoured account of her developing sexuality: "An Unfinished Saga", and Karla Jay's lucid assessment of the possibilities of surviving gay coupledom. There is only one piece by "Anonymous" in the book, and it appears in this section. I question the value of ever printing a piece by someone who feels anonymity is still necessary, at least without some explanation of why that is still the case. Certainly it is incongruous in a book entitled After You're Out.

"Survival in a Hostile World" is the title of the second section of the book, and is introduced by a fine essay with the same title by Allen Young. He clearly recognizes that survival involves a little more than reform of the present system,
"that gay liberation will have achieved little if it merely means that it's all right for a select group of white, middle-class people to 'have sex' in a different way."
There is a strong hint that the survival of gay people is rather closely linked to the destruction of capitalism but the topic is not pursued - that would be beyond the scope of the book. But Jeanne Cordova gives us some very practical advice about letting men and dad know without getting yourself involved in hysterical scenes. And she ends her piece with one of those blinding insights which seem so obvious after someone else has thought them out. It's just this: "Ninety-eight percent of parents and employers will never admit more than, 'You're okay with me, whatever you do.' Emotional outrage about the insanity of their prejudice must give way to the intellectual realization - giving us true support and affirmation means they'd have to ask their heterosexual selves, 'What's wrong with me?'"

This second section is fat with good bits. Catherine Nossia writes an articulate and level-headed account of her life as both a prostitute and a lesbian, and quite persuaded me that she well deserves a higher price for those services that most women provide either for free or for a pittance. "Lesbian Mother" and "Faggot Father" are good character pieces that endorse in their separate ways the vital importance of being an open lesbian or faggot with your children. And "An Interview Between a Hustler and His Customer" gives us a glimpse into an aspect of gay life which most of us are still too young to know about.

Part Three is called "Creating Community and Helping Ourselves" - and charts some of the alternate services gay people have set up in order to create the sense of community that society has denied them. It opens with what might seem the denial of the possibility of community to some - an article entitled "Can Men and Women Work Together?" But it there is to be any palpable sense of community based on real equality, then men are going to have to be very much aware of what it is they have done and still do that so often damages and exhausts women, and this transcribed
"forum" is a very good contribution to that end. There is a voice from the Third World warning us that otherwise our community we may have managed to build so far, it has not noticeably had a place for our sisters and brothers of colour. There's some good advice on checking out therapists before you plunk down your money. Thoughts on getting old. Practical and useful information about V.O., the value of archives, the use and abuse of alcohol in the gay community.

Altogether, a satisfying and conscientious anthology. There is clear editorial awareness that a lot of gay people who pick up this book may well wish to contact some of the groups referred to in the text, and addresses are provided in footnotes on the page itself. Very handy.
It gladdens me that this book will be available to gay people across the country - it is not only rich fare for those of us who are already out, it is a clear and encouraging call across the divide that separates us from our still hiding sisters and brothers.

By Gerald Hannon □

The Fancy Dancer

Patricia Nell Warren
Morrow (Gage in Canada), 1976,
$8.95

The first response is laughter. Not that the novel is comic by intention - I really don't think Warren has a sense of humour, and whatever sends her characters into fits of throaty chuckle is likely to send the reader to the kitchen for another beer. No, The Fancy Dancer is hopelessly serious stuff. What's funny is that against all odds, the new book is even worse than the author's last one, in itself a nasty bit of work entitled The Front Runner.

Very briefly, the story goes like this:
Tom is a blond, good-looking, macho catholic priest in a small town. Vidal is a dark (¼ Indian), good-looking, macho mechanic and local troublemaker. The novel is set in Montana, where the country indeed. After 120 pages of interminable characterizing and some routine dialogues on the difficulties of being gay, Vidal finally manages to seduce Tom. (I was a naked Jacob wrestling a naked angel on the deep red carpet. Really. You've got to enter giggle or throw up.) They become further involved. After another 160 pages of catholic guilt and intrigue, Vidal, the most boring drag ball to mention, they go their separate ways: Vidal, reformed, is off to university, while Tom goes back to the gospels, ready to serve his "gay constituency." (We understand, at the

SUMMER SEASON

TORONTO DANCE THEATRE

PERFORMANCES JULY 16 & 17, 21 to 24, 28 to 31

BOX OFFICE OPENS 8pm - SHOW TIME 10pm
TICKETS, ADULTS $4.00 STUDENTS $2.50
INFORMATION: 423 7016

TORONTO WORKSHOP PRODUCTIONS THEATRE
12 ALEXANDER STREET

This poster has been made possible in part through a grant from the Ministry of Culture and Recreation to the province of Ontario.

end, that the affair could never have worked. Tom aims high, what he really wants is to be fucked around by god) this. But well-intentioned liberality certainly doesn't excuse the plain bad writing she produces, and neither does a captive gay market. The novel is well-told from the point of view of the priest, in a first person narrative. But it is in no way a psychological study. Properly said, the first person narrative can be a clever device used to shed light on the main character, the man telling the story. In this instance, it seems but a shabby trick, designed to protect the author from direct responsibility for the outrageously simple-minded views expounded in the book. There is no hint of irony, we are meant to take this straight. Excuse the pun.

For those of you who looked forward to a repeat of the soft-core porn elements of The Front Runner, forget it. There's no cock in this one at all. The word "genitals" is used once or twice, but only in confession. There's an obvious attempt to create a kind of elegant anticlimax, however, which is usually good for a chuckle. "Without really moving, his body tensed until the tendons creaked like kelp." Like kelp?

One thing that was obvious in the last novel is here again in force, and that's Warren's anti-woman stance. In the midst of a country full of apparently kind, understanding, and compassionate bishops, coops, priests, and parents, only two characters disgust her. Both are women. One is the only embodiment of anti-gay sentiment in the book. The other is Vida's wife, "his cover, a mentally retarded woman of about nineteen." "Patty Ann" is described in the most vile terms. Imaginable, gratuitously insulting, the insults are rolled out in her madness, but in her femininity! "Up close, Patty Ann had a rank unwashed female smell that almost made me gag" and "On the floor in one corner lay a squashed sanitary napkin stained with fresh blood."

Warren's attitude to gay men is of course much nicer than her attitude towards women. In her world, we are all six feet tall, all beautiful, humpy and ultimately not-thinking. No ugly gays for Pankos Hall. For that matter, no unwashed faggots either. We are invariably strong, virile, aggressive-enough Macho guys. Hollywood triumphant. Whatever we think of straight attitudes, machismo is obviously something to treasure.

The author's whole-hearted appreciation of the violence inherent in her brand of society, gay or straight, is summed up neatly in a grotesquely christian segment near the end of the novel: a "gay mass" that includes a choreographed pageant at the altar. This dance displays, elaborately, the persecution and crucifixion of a young gay man, not just the "passion" of the gay lover, but the passion of Christ as well! Very bizarre. She seems to want us to base gay culture on the very same myths that have been the instruments of our persecution for two thousand years. Turn the other cheek, as it were.

Which is, I suppose, what we all should do regarding this book. It's more an evangelical tract than it is a novel, and perhaps should be ignored as such. Except that stories like this, published and distributed by major outlets, probably fill the gay quota, use whatever money is available for gay fiction within the confines of straight publishing. Books like The Fancy Dancer introduce and/or perpetuate, in the minds of gays as well as straights, much that is at the heart of our oppression, and our self-oppression. And this, or so it seems to me, should make you very angry indeed.

By Gordon Montador

Theatre

A Chorus Line

Michael Bennett
Royal Alexandra Theatre
Toronto

This Broadway smash hit musical unexpectedly provides several interesting perspectives on the possibilities of gay theatre.

The play is essentially an audition taking place in front of our eyes in which 24 dancers, several of whom are gay, compete with one another to secure a part in a Broadway show. As the actors reveal their rather drab life stories in a series of short, usually comic, monologues and slick jazz dance numbers, the theme of homosexuality is gradually developed.

One of the few really moving and dramatic scenes in the non-stop two-hour show consists of the faltering revelation by a shy young Puerto Rican, sympathetically played by Tommy Aguilar, of his homosexuality and gay life. The middle class, middle aged audience at the Royal Alex on opening night fell into a stunned embarrassed silence listening to Aguilar's matter-of-fact description of an experience as a young boy in a movie house where, as McKenzie Porter wrote in The Toronto Sun, "he was seduced by pederasts, initiated into homosexual tastes and driven into show business via a skazy drag troupe."

The fact that A Chorus Line has won the New York Critics Circle Award, a Pulitzer Prize for drama, several Tony Awards and 5 million dollars for movie rights alone is of course more the result of its high calibre dancing and choreography, driving jazz-rock score and fluid cinematic staging than the play's fleeting treatment of homosexuality in what is often indistinguishable and repetitious characterization.

I personally nevertheless found the play's appeal more in its honest, non-sensationalized depiction of gay dancers than in any brilliance in choreography or musical score per se. Chorus Line works because we admire the skill, agility and enthusiasm of its young dancers. Structurally and thematically, the play has all the elements of at least one kind of workable formula for a more distinctly gay theatre: music, song, dance, dramatic lighting and costuming in a visually exciting and entertaining plastic composition along with empathetic dramatic conflict, characterization and thematic development.

Some cast members of 'A Chorus Line'

What Chorus Line also reveals is the necessary relationship and sense of community between an audience and the events and actors on stage. Performed before a straight bourgeois far-apsed audience, Chorus Line is essentially another youth rip-off without even the political implications of its Hair predecessor. Its audience paying up to $15 per ticket leaves the theatre with the relieved realization that, yes, the show must go on and that somehow these struggling and starving talented young dancers will find success in their artistic profession.

A distinctly gay theatre addressing itself to the gay condition in Canada and created by largely gay playwrights, directors, actors and other technicians would be able to, and would indeed have to, address itself much more clearly to the aspirations, problems and expectations of the community it serves. An increasing number of feminist, black, native peoples, ethnic and linguistic theatres already exist across Canada celebrating and examining life and society from the viewpoint of their particular communities and cultures. A gay theatre avoiding stringent separatism and able to tap the already abundant creative talent of gay theatre professionals could play an important catalytic role in the necessary self-expression of gay people and their constantly changing, dialectic relationship and dialogue with straight society.

All the necessary elements for an indigenous gay theatre exist. The question is what kind of theatre the gay community wants and is willing to support.

by Anton Wagner

Books

A Lasting Relationship:

Homosexuals and Society

Jeremy Seabrook

Allan Lane (Longmans in Canada), 1976, $14.75

Seabrook seems to be still guilty about being gay, not so much because of sexual repression, but because his homosexual identity links him with people that as a socialist he would not be seen dead with. Specifically, he is haunted by the description of homosexuality as bourgeois decadence, and is appalled to find that gay men can be as conservative, unaware, and consumption-oriented as anyone else. He does not seem to have got used to the fact that capitalism will exploit anything it is allowed to, including gay people, and that gays do not have any special qualities that would allow them to escape the blandishments of the economic structure in which they live. He is always being surprised and disappointed by other gay people in this respect, and this book is his way of dissociating himself from them.

Now that the presumption of "expensively decorated gay bars" is being represented as up-front struggle, even so jaundiced an analysis as Seabrook's has value. Unfortunately, he is not content to observe the sad fact that gay men are part of the capitalist system, but has over-reacted into developing an elaborate, exaggerated thesis to the effect that gay men have a special role in perpetuating it. His central idea is that "the homosexual is the prototype of conforming man" (p. 104); that gay men, far from being the oppressed outcasts they think they are, form the privileged vanguard of an overproductive capitalism in

An important new book from England is now available in Canada.

Jeremy Seabrook's 'A Lasting Relationship'
Hardcover edition $14.75
At Glad Day Books, 4 Collier Street
(at Yonge) in Toronto,
For mail order service, please add 65¢ to cover postage.

Distributed by Longman's of Canada, Ltd.

Our Image

promoting the consumption of more and yet more goods. Probably one could correctly maintain that single gay men have more money to dispose of privately than people with children. They could also point to the influence of homosexual taste on fashions for clothes and entertainment. But Seabrook's notions go far beyond this, and his dizzy rhetoric abandons logic in an effort to portray gay men as prodigies of irresponsible consumption.

One way Seabrook achieves this is to define consumption so broadly that it includes any activity, experience or sensation (p. 105). In particular, he seems to see sex as a form of consumption, as though it used up some resource or took something away from people. Furthermore, he refuses to make proper comparisons, drawing enormous conclusions about homosexuality from a number of interviews with gay men, without proving that heterosexual attitudes are significantly different.

The result is a muddle of acute observation of real taking off into fantastic generalization. For instance, in a treatment of "gay tourism," Seabrook portrays amusingly the kind of conversations gay men have about the sexual possibilities of travel, and quotes many of the more squalid-inducing comments from the Spartacus Guide. We are supposed to deduce from these observations that gay men are characterized by a peculiarly exploitative and apolitical attitude to travel. Really? More exploitative than the whole package tour industry, which thrives on selling fantasy heterosexual holiday romances, ruining whole coastlines in the process? More apolitical than the flood of tourist literature that depicts fun-loving heterosexuals trilling to the bullfrogs of fascist Spain. Compared with this, the Spartacus Guide is an honest and sombre observation, positively brimming with social awareness. If gay tourism does have any distinctive feature at all, it is that the sexual possibilities are realized and do not remain tantalizingly on the level of generalized fantasy, and it is this that Seabrook is really complaining about, as in his remark that "the world has become a trolly (cursing) ground" (p. 114). If you're making love in the parks, beaches and washrooms of the world as a harmless and uncommercial activity, and for what it is worth, my impression is that gay men make rather good use of travel hampers as they have slightly more chance of meeting the people.

The same faults vitiate all Seabrook's observations on gay disco, bars, meetings, parties, interior decoration and everything else. They tell us everything and nothing about homosexuality. For his comments are not so much about homosexuals as about human beings, as is made clear by comments such as "homosexual tourism, like any other, becomes an irresponsible plundering of other cultures and environments, in need to consume" (p. 116). It includes homosexual tourism like any other, then the whole argument about the special role of gay men falls to the ground.

Take away Seabrook's theoretical commentary from the text and we are left with a collection of accounts of about 40 gay men which sparkle with a certain handiness. The men interviewed range reasonably widely over age, class experience and consciousness. I fancy that they do much to substantiate Seabrook's exaggerated ideas about gay conservatism, but they do illustrate everything that we have been talking about in the movement, and they point especially well to the experience of self-discovery. It is also good that Seabrook identifies himself as gay, and does not present gay men as a problem group that the liberal reader should be kind to and do something about.

On this level the book is a kind of advance, though spoilt by Seabrook's allyship attitude to living. As political commitment is a disaster, its purpose is to be to measure heterosexual leftists that they need not take seriously the threat posed to them by gay liberation. In fact Seabrook is a sort of repressive personality's David Reuben, able to make homophobia a respectable element of the revolutionary repertoire by identifying gay men with the capitalist enemy. The argument is the same as that which made anti-Semitism respectable by pointing to Jewish bankers.

However, I should guess that the majority of his readers will be gay themselves. And interested as he is in the social function of the gay minority, Seabrook feels the need to establish for the social function of his book in disseminating information on gay life to readers who are hungry for it. The gay movement is treated with as much scorn as is the commercial gay scene; publications and resources are mentioned in an off-hand way without proper references. The lack of index or bibliography is also remarkable for a book which is claimed to be "the most truthful and important book about homosexuals to have been written." Seabrook declines to see himself as enjoying continuity or community with other gay thinkers, and presents his ideas as though he were a unique observer writing in an intellectual vacuum. These are real ironies for a writer with a collectivist ideology, one who accuses gay men of irresponsibility, individualism and exploitation. They surely stem from a persistent guilt about identifying himself with other gay men, and indeed with other human beings.

by Andrew Hodges

Transvestites and Transsexuals:

Mixed Views
Deborah Feinblom
Delacorte, 1976, $14.75

Feinblom has an easy readable style and sympathetic attitude that make this book readily accessible. Her observations are drawn largely from an association of male heterosexual transvestites and clients of a gender-identity clinic that she subsequently organized.

Most striking about the heterosexual transvestites is their conservatism. Without sharply differentiated sex roles, transvestism dissolves into impossibility. Feinblom's notes in the parts of a defensive, "masculine" biographies among these closet (or "suitcase") transvestites: "The reinforced message... is that men who race sports cars, parachute jump, body-build like a man, is an army sergeant or a top-level computer analyst could not possibly be a 'pansy' or a 'deviant.'" (p. 126) Their erotic interest in feminine apparel requires a Hollywood "ideal" of femininity far removed from the everyday lives of women. (Here, Feinblom unfortunately misses the opportunity to compare erotic attachment to other sex clothing with erotic attachment to same-sex clothing, e.g. leather fetishism among men.)

Women's and gay liberationists have long been accused of transsexualism as an expression of sex-role conservatism and guilt about homosexuality. These doubts are reinforced by some of the remarks offered by transsexuals. For example, "I would like to have a man make love to me, but I am frightened that he would find me to be male physically and this would make him unhappy. I would want him instead to be satisfied in finding me sexually responsive as a woman... Relationships in the gay world are no good because the man is enjoying himself because I am male." (p. 195) Or "I discovered crushes on the more handsome male students—a frightening thought when linked with my secret and also to me, further proof that somehow I was a lesbian. I liked it or not, it was in my mind." (p. 209) That homophobia cannot underlie all transsexualism is clear, however, from male-to-female transsexuals who choose female roles and identities as non-stereotyped female identities. The evidence in this book points toward the fact that gender identity, like sexual orientation, has a resilient psychological continuity or authenticity which precedes and resists social pressure.

Transvestites and Transsexuals is a start on a complex topic and is perhaps the best of the in the questions it raises than in the quality of its answers.

By Barry D. Adam

The Ivory Tunnel

Small Press Books

Daniel Curzon, The Misadventures of Tim McPick, or, The Story of Tim and His People, 200 pages, $3.50 from Curzon, English Dept., CSUF, Fresno, California 93740, U.S.A.

The point has been made (and by all means send us your detailed comments and refutations) that satire, by its nature, must be conservative; the author and the readers must share certain social assumptions and the targets should take new and strange enough form to provoke laughter. Allowing for a few heresies here and there, the most important of which is a 17-year-old homosexual hero, The Misadventures of Tim McPick (Zipper, by the way, is his dog) is a conservative satire on the social attitudes and ideological follies of the 60's (and beyond).

like the white liberal's speech on being robbed by a gang of "Black Bobcats": "There's a definite need for the crimes you're committing so you can have pride in your community. I mean, the gay community will have need of such testimonials!"

While the campus militancies described in McPick were coming to full flower in the mid-60's, Pete Hohenberg was running a coffee house, The Ox, at 44 St. George St. in Toronto. We had following-poetry, "happenings" and art shows. (John Sewell, a Toronto alderman once was one of the exhibitors, I remember). There were on-the-spot guitar workshops at all hours in the back kitchen and long-playing card games in smoky basement rooms, the cards, and a few new ideas in the art shows especially scandalised our landlords, the Student Christian Movement.

One of the regulars in this den of iniquity was Brian Shelvin, who created quite a stir when one of his prankishly gruesome stories was taken as a factual report. He recounted the story of John Fare, an artist whose performances consisted of successive amputations of various parts of his body. The story ended, "And off and on were disappearing the equipment used. I remember, on the side of the jar, standing beside the birth certificate near the entrance, was a label:

John Fare
right hand
sept. 17, 1965.

Shelvin's story has proved prophetic. At least one artist since is said to have died "from blood loss" following a similar series of displays. And a recent issue of New York magazine details the bizarre goings on of a young performer who locks himself in trunks for days, crucifies himself, etc., in order to make an impression on the Art Scene.

The story, "The Hard", is one of the experimental plays and tales in Theatrical Experiments ($3.50 from Curzon, Box 48906 Station Boulevard, Vancouver, BC). Larry Schour's Hard Swallows ($1.75 from Curzon, Box 22 W. 19th St., New York, NY 10011) explores the erotic tension of male relationships. The poetry here is beneath the usually unspectacular surface. Some of the poems are just too fat to be effective, but the rest make one eager for a longer book developing some of the insights hinted at.

Much of Alex Glitzen's The Year Book ($3, N Atlantic Books, Route 2, Box 135, Plainfield, NJ) is composed of banal gossip like "I sit between Henry Van Dyke and John Perraulli in the annex of St. Mark's" and "It's Auden's 50th birthday/Nixon's real Mao/He Berger that's begun/John Sokol delivers 3 of his early Constructions/& the news tells me it was Winchell not Lipman". Lists of films seen, books read, names dropped and carefully dated and worded out half airy, half fake-casual. Did the late Frank O'Hara make it all look so easy that pratlings like this are his unfortunate poetic legacy?

Norman Richards' Nocturnal Emulations ($1.50 from Oscar Wilde Memorial Bookshop, 15 Christopher St., New York, NY) is about on the same level, but with occasional and in fact philosophical musings ("if it's such a demanding question") and the conventional love-hate stuff, again badly written. Badly spelled too.

Norman's Tommy Avicelli's poems in Magic Doesn't Live Anywhere ($1 from Oscar Wilde) begin promisingly enough, but he doesn't seem to know what to do with them two poems, "Pale and Bright" and "Naked" work well, but much of the time Avicelli's muddled obsession with rape and effeminacy gets in the way of any clear vision. I know the school system and its censors and for these last how many years, but if they can't spell, some of these poets should have enough consideration for their readers to at least invest in a dictionary before they rush to print.

by Ian Young

Would You Want This Face on Your Dime? Prince Charles, on Women's Liberation: "Those idiotic women go around telling all the other women to think the way they do - basically. I think because they want to be - me, to my mind, totally wrong."

Maybe It's The Tacky Robes. Ed Ratushny, Special Advisor to the Minister of Justice on the Appointment of Judges, responding to a question regarding his feelings on appointing open gays to the bench, replies that his department is currently under pressure to appoint more women, and is occupying itself with that problem. But it, at some point, enough women could not be found. "I suppose some halfway measure might be in order."

Flair for the Apparent Liberatee. responding to rumors of his forthcoming marriage says that he's sorry, but he's not the marrying kind.

Undo That Second Button and See The World. Dr. Joan Lockard, professor of neurological-psychology and psychology at the University of Washington says studies have shown that women hitch-hikers doubled the number of rides when they used padding to increase their bust size. There is an effort to do a comparative study by having male students expose their chest hair (a comparable padding was not considered).

So Incredibly Silly. On "As It Happens", the well-known CBC radio show, the author of a book on bodybuilding told host Barbara Frum that homosexuals have an aesthetic outlook toward life which is why they adore bodybuilders and art exhibitions. (Really, that's exactly what he said.)

Smoother Than a Baby's Bum Dept. One of Ann Lander's correspondents advises her that "chest wigs" are available for those men unblessed with nature's own rug. Well, we've seen them and while they do create a gorilla-like patch of dymal at the throat of an open shirt, without the shirt one appears to have glued a dead rat to one's chest. What price hairy?

It's Because They Have Weak Ankles. Al Wiseman, assistant security director for the NHL, commenting on recent disclosures of homosexuality in the American Football League, says that in professional hockey in Canada "There have been no such incidents," and that "The proof of the pudding is in the eating" is that experience talking? (And with its mouth full too)

I Will Suck You Till You Die. Judy LaMarsh, in conversation with Dracula experts John Hensch, Elwy Yost and Rod Coneysburg, CBC Radio, Jan. 9/76: "Okay, what about sexism in Dracula? Has there ever been a woman Dracula, or a gay Dracula?"

Because I Don't Own a Homograph. Commenting on his wife's (Alexis Smith) inclusion in a psychic romp with Melina Mercouri in her upcoming film Once Is Not Enough, Craig Stevens said to her, "If it doesn't bother you, it doesn't bother me." But in the true tradition of hetero double standard, he confesses, "I wouldn't play a homosexual myself."

Get the Idea? If it's trashy enough, clip or copy it, date it and send it to TRASH, c/o The Body Politic, Box 7288, Station A, Toronto, Ont. M5W 1X9.

fruit bread • oatmeal bread black bread • white whole wheat • French cornmeal bread • cracked wheat light rye • whole grain rye raisin and currant • brown potato pumpernickel • black walnut bread cheese bread • onion pizza buns • muffins buttermilk bread • crunchy bread sticks

the PPER CRUST
natural bakery

The Summerhill Market, 1099 Yonge Street, Toronto

A magazine for country budgets

Four issues yearly $4.00
4525 Lower Wolf Creek Rd.
Wolf Creek, Oregon 97437

GAY LEFT

A SOCIALIST JOURNAL FOR GAY PEOPLE

"GAY LEFT has a two fold aim. First, to contribute to a socialist analysis of homosexual oppression; secondly to encourage in the gay movement an understanding of the links between the struggle against sexual oppression and the struggle for socialism."

RATES BY POST UK: 40p each
International: 50p (first money order)
$1.50 (US or Canadian Check)

3000 Upper Red Bank Ave. #118 B-2

GAY LEFT GAY LEFT GAY LEFT GAY LEFT
GAY LEFT GAY LEFT GAY LEFT GAY LEFT

RT, P.O. BOX 89, WOHORVILLE, MASS. 02744

single copies $1.00
6 issues $5.00
12 issues $9.00
12 issues $12.00
12 issues $15.00
12 issues $18.00
12 issues $21.00
12 issues $24.00
12 issues $27.00
12 issues $30.00
12 issues $33.00
12 issues $36.00
12 issues $39.00
12 issues $42.00
12 issues $45.00
12 issues $48.00
12 issues $51.00
12 issues $54.00
12 issues $57.00
12 issues $60.00
12 issues $63.00
12 issues $66.00
12 issues $69.00
12 issues $72.00
12 issues $75.00
12 issues $78.00
12 issues $81.00
12 issues $84.00
12 issues $87.00
12 issues $90.00
12 issues $93.00
12 issues $96.00
12 issues $99.00
12 issues $102.00
12 issues $105.00
12 issues $108.00
12 issues $111.00
12 issues $114.00
12 issues $117.00
12 issues $120.00
12 issues $123.00
12 issues $126.00
12 issues $129.00
12 issues $132.00
12 issues $135.00
12 issues $138.00
12 issues $141.00
12 issues $144.00
12 issues $147.00
12 issues $150.00
12 issues $153.00
12 issues $156.00
12 issues $159.00
12 issues $162.00
12 issues $165.00
12 issues $168.00
12 issues $171.00
12 issues $174.00
12 issues $177.00
12 issues $180.00
12 issues $183.00
12 issues $186.00
12 issues $189.00
12 issues $192.00
12 issues $195.00
12 issues $198.00
12 issues $201.00
12 issues $204.00
12 issues $207.00
12 issues $210.00
12 issues $213.00
12 issues $216.00
12 issues $219.00
12 issues $222.00
12 issues $225.00
12 issues $228.00
12 issues $231.00
12 issues $234.00
12 issues $237.00
12 issues $240.00
12 issues $243.00
12 issues $246.00
12 issues $249.00
12 issues $252.00
12 issues $255.00
12 issues $258.00
12 issues $261.00
12 issues $264.00
12 issues $267.00
12 issues $270.00
12 issues $273.00
12 issues $276.00
12 issues $279.00
12 issues $282.00
12 issues $285.00
12 issues $288.00
12 issues $291.00
12 issues $294.00
12 issues $297.00
12 issues $300.00
12 issues $303.00
12 issues $306.00
12 issues $309.00
12 issues $312.00
12 issues $315.00
12 issues $318.00
12 issues $321.00
12 issues $324.00
12 issues $327.00
12 issues $330.00
12 issues $333.00
12 issues $336.00
12 issues $339.00
12 issues $342.00
12 issues $345.00
12 issues $348.00
12 issues $351.00
12 issues $354.00
12 issues $357.00
12 issues $360.00
12 issues $363.00
12 issues $366.00
12 issues $369.00
12 issues $372.00
12 issues $375.00
12 issues $378.00
12 issues $381.00
12 issues $384.00
12 issues $387.00
12 issues $390.00
12 issues $393.00
12 issues $396.00
12 issues $399.00
12 issues $402.00
12 issues $405.00
12 issues $408.00
12 issues $411.00
12 issues $414.00
12 issues $417.00
12 issues $420.00
12 issues $423.00
12 issues $426.00
12 issues $429.00
12 issues $432.00
12 issues $435.00
12 issues $438.00
12 issues $441.00
12 issues $444.00
12 issues $447.00
12 issues $450.00
12 issues $453.00
12 issues $456.00
12 issues $459.00
12 issues $462.00
12 issues $465.00
12 issues $468.00
12 issues $471.00
12 issues $474.00
12 issues $477.00
12 issues $480.00
12 issues $483.00
12 issues $486.00
12 issues $489.00
12 issues $492.00
12 issues $495.00
12 issues $498.00
12 issues $501.00
12 issues $504.00
12 issues $507.00
12 issues $510.00
12 issues $513.00
12 issues $516.00
12 issues $519.00
12 issues $522.00
12 issues $525.00
12 issues $528.00
12 issues $531.00
12 issues $534.00
12 issues $537.00
12 issues $540.00
12 issues $543.00
12 issues $546.00
12 issues $549.00
12 issues $552.00
12 issues $555.00
12 issues $558.00
12 issues $561.00
12 issues $564.00
12 issues $567.00
12 issues $570.00
12 issues $573.00
12 issues $576.00
12 issues $579.00
12 issues $582.00
12 issues $585.00
12 issues $588.00
12 issues $591.00
12 issues $594.00
12 issues $597.00
12 issues $600.00
12 issues $603.00
12 issues $606.00
12 issues $609.00
12 issues $612.00
12 issues $615.00
12 issues $618.00
12 issues $621.00
12 issues $624.00
12 issues $627.00
12 issues $630.00
12 issues $633.00
12 issues $636.00
12 issues $639.00
12 issues $642.00
12 issues $645.00
12 issues $648.00
12 issues $651.00
12 issues $654.00
12 issues $657.00
12 issues $660.00
12 issues $663.00
12 issues $666.00
12 issues $669.00
12 issues $672.00
12 issues $675.00
12 issues $678.00
12 issues $681.00
12 issues $684.00
12 issues $687.00
12 issues $690.00
12 issues $693.00
12 issues $696.00
12 issues $699.00
12 issues $702.00
12 issues $705.00
12 issues $708.00
12 issues $711.00
12 issues $714.00
12 issues $717.00
12 issues $720.00
12 issues $723.00
12 issues $726.00
12 issues $729.00
12 issues $732.00
12 issues $735.00
12 issues $738.00
12 issues $741.00
12 issues $744.00
12 issues $747.00
12 issues $750.00
12 issues $753.00
12 issues $756.00
12 issues $759.00
12 issues $762.00
12 issues $765.00
12 issues $768.00
12 issues $771.00
12 issues $774.00
12 issues $777.00
12 issues $780.00
12 issues $783.00
12 issues $786.00
12 issues $789.00
12 issues $792.00
12 issues $795.00
12 issues $798.00
12 issues $801.00
12 issues $804.00
12 issues $807.00
12 issues $810.00
12 issues $813.00
12 issues $816.00
12 issues $819.00
12 issues $822.00
12 issues $825.00
12 issues $828.00
12 issues $831.00
12 issues $834.00
12 issues $837.00
12 issues $840.00
12 issues $843.00
12 issues $846.00
12 issues $849.00
12 issues $852.00
12 issues $855.00
12 issues $858.00
12 issues $861.00
12 issues $864.00
12 issues $867.00
12 issues $870.00
12 issues $873.00
12 issues $876.00
12 issues $879.00
12 issues $882.00
12 issues $885.00
12 issues $888.00
12 issues $891.00
12 issues $894.00
12 issues $897.00
12 issues $900.00
12 issues $903.00
12 issues $906.00
12 issues $909.00
12 issues $912.00
12 issues $915.00
12 issues $918.00
12 issues $921.00
12 issues $924.00
12 issues $927.00
12 issues $930.00
12 issues $933.00
12 issues $936.00
12 issues $939.00
12 issues $942.00
12 issues $945.00
12 issues $948.00
12 issues $951.00
12 issues $954.00
12 issues $957.00
12 issues $960.00
12 issues $963.00
12 issues $966.00
12 issues $969.00
12 issues $972.00
12 issues $975.00
12 issues $978.00
12 issues $981.00
12 issues $984.00
12 issues $987.00
12 issues $990.00
12 issues $993.00
12 issues $996.00
12 issues $999.00
12 issues $1002.00
12 issues $1005.00
12 issues $1008.00
12 issues $1011.00
12 issues $1014.00
12 issues $1017.00
12 issues $1020.00
12 issues $1023.00
12 issues $1026.00
12 issues $1029.00
12 issues $1032.00
12 issues $1035.00
12 issues $1038.00
12 issues $1041.00
12 issues $1044.00
12 issues $1047.00
12 issues $1050.00
12 issues $1053.00
12 issues $1056.00
12 issues $1059.00
12 issues $1062.00
12 issues $1065.00
12 issues $1068.00
12 issues $1071.00
12 issues $1074.00
12 issues $1077.00
12 issues $1080.00
12 issues $1083.00
12 issues $1086.00
12 issues $1089.00
12 issues $1092.00
12 issues $1095.00
12 issues $1098.00
12 issues $1101.00
12 issues $1104.00
12 issues $1107.00
12 issues $1110.00
12 issues $1113.00
12 issues $1116.00
12 issues $1119.00
12 issues $1122.00
12 issues $1125.00
12 issues $1128.00
12 issues $1131.00
12 issues $1134.00
12 issues $1137.00
12 issues $1140.00
12 issues $1143.00
12 issues $1146.00
12 issues $1149.00
12 issues $1152.00
12 issues $1155.00
12 issues $1158.00
12 issues $1161.00
12 issues $1164.00
12 issues $1167.00
12 issues $1170.00
12 issues $1173.00
12 issues $1176.00
12 issues $1179.00
12 issues $1182.00
12 issues $1185.00
12 issues $1188.00
12 issues $1191.00
12 issues $1194.00
12 issues $1197.00
12 issues $1200.00
12 issues $1203.00
12 issues $1206.00
12 issues $1209.00
12 issues $1212.00
12 issues $1215.00
12 issues $1218.00
12 issues $1221.00
12 issues $1224.00
12 issues $1227.00
12 issues $1230.00
12 issues $1233.00
12 issues $1236.00
12 issues $1239.00
12 issues $1242.00
12 issues $1245.00
12 issues $1248.00
12 issues $1251.00
12 issues $1254.00
12 issues $1257.00
12 issues $1260.00
12 issues $1263.00
12 issues $1266.00
12 issues $1269.00
12 issues $1272.00
12 issues $1275.00
12 issues $1278.00
12 issues $1281.00
12 issues $1284.00
12 issues $1287.00
12 issues $1290.00
12 issues $1293.00
12 issues $1296.00
12 issues $1299.00
12 issues $1302.00
12 issues $1305.00
12 issues $1308.00
12 issues $1311.00
12 issues $1314.00
12 issues $1317.00
12 issues $1320.00
12 issues $1323.00
12 issues $1326.00
12 issues $1329.00
12 issues $1332.00
12 issues $1335.00
12 issues $1338.00
12 issues $1341.00
12 issues $1344.00
12 issues $1347.00
12 issues $1350.00
12 issues $1353.00
12 issues $1356.00
12 issues $1359.00
12 issues $1362.00
12 issues $1365.00
12 issues $1368.00
12 issues $1371.00
12 issues $1374.00
12 issues $1377.00
12 issues $1380.00
12 issues $1383.00
12 issues $1386.00
12 issues $1389.00
12 issues $1392.00
12 issues $1395.00
12 issues $1398.00
12 issues $1401.00
12 issues $1404.00
12 issues $1407.00
12 issues $1410.00
12 issues $1413.00
12 issues $1416.00
12 issues $1419.00
12 issues $1422.00
12 issues $1425.00
12 issues $1428.00
12 issues $1431.00
12 issues $1434.00
12 issues $1437.00
12 issues $1440.00
12 issues $1443.00
12 issues $1446.00
12 issues $1449.00
12 issues $1452.00
12 issues $1455.00
12 issues $1458.00
12 issues $1461.00
12 issues $1464.00
12 issues $1467.00
12 issues $1470.00
12 issues $1473.00
12 issues $1476.00
12 issues $1479.00
12 issues $1482.00
12 issues $1485.00
12 issues $1488.00
12 issues $1491.00
12 issues $1494.00
12 issues $1497.00
12 issues $1500.00
12 issues $1503.00
12 issues $1506.00
12 issues $1509.00
12 issues $1512.00
12 issues $1515.00
12 issues $1518.00
12 issues $1521.00
12 issues $1524.00
12 issues $1527.00
12 issues $1530.00
12 issues $1533.00
12 issues $1536.00
12 issues $1539.00
12 issues $1542.00
12 issues $1545.00
12 issues $1548.00
12 issues $1551.00
12 issues $1554.00
12 issues $1557.00
12 issues $1560.00
12 issues $1563.00
12 issues $1566.00
12 issues $1569.00
12 issues $1572.00
12 issues $1575.00
12 issues $1578.00
12 issues $1581.00
12 issues $1584.00
12 issues $1587.00
12 issues $1590.00
12 issues $1593.00
12 issues $1596.00
12 issues $1599.00
12 issues $1602.00
12 issues $1605.00
12 issues $1608.00
12 issues $1611.00
12 issues $1614.00
12 issues $1617.00
12 issues $1620.00
12 issues $1623.00
12 issues $1626.00
12 issues $1629.00
12 issues $1632.00
12 issues $1635.00
12 issues $1638.00
12 issues $1641.00
12 issues $1644.00
12 issues $1647.00
12 issues $1650.00
12 issues $1653.00
12 issues $1656.00
12 issues $1659.00
12 issues $1662.00
12 issues $1665.00
12 issues $1668.00
12 issues $1671.00
12 issues $1674.00
12 issues $1677.00
12 issues $1680.00
12 issues $1683.00
12 issues $1686.00
12 issues $1689.00
12 issues $1692.00
12 issues $1695.00
12 issues $1698.00
12 issues $1701.00
12 issues $1704.00
12 issues $1707.00
12 issues $1710.00
12 issues $1713.00
12 issues $1716.00
12 issues $1719.00
12 issues $1722.00
12 issues $1725.00
12 issues $1728.00
12 issues $1731.00
12 issues $1734.00
12 issues $1737.00
12 issues $1740.00
12 issues $1743.00
12 issues $1746.00
12 issues $1749.00
12 issues $1752.00
12 issues $1755.00
12 issues $1758.00
12 issues $1761.00
12 issues $1764.00
12 issues $1767.00
12 issues $1770.00
12 issues $1773.00
12 issues $1776.00
12 issues $1779.00
12 issues $1782.00
12 issues $1785.00
12 issues $1788.00
12 issues $1791.00
12 issues $1794.00
12 issues $1797.00
12 issues $1800.00
12 issues $1803.00
12 issues $1806.00
12 issues $1809.00
12 issues $1812.00
12 issues $1815.00
12 issues $1818.00
12 issues $1821.00
12 issues $1824.00
12 issues $1827.00
12 issues $1830.00
12 issues $1833.00
12 issues $1836.00
12 issues $1839.00
12 issues $1842.00
12 issues $1845.00
12 issues $1848.00
12 issues $1851.00
12 issues $1854.00
12 issues $1857.00
12 issues $1860.00
12 issues $1863.00
12 issues $1866.00
12 issues $1869.00
12 issues $1872.00
12 issues $1875.00
12 issues $1878.00
12 issues $1881.00
12 issues $1884.00
12 issues $1887.00
12 issues $1890.00
12 issues $1893.00
12 issues $1896.00
12 issues $1899.00
12 issues $1902.00
12 issues $1905.00
12 issues $1908.00
12 issues $1911.00
12 issues $1914.00
12 issues $1917.00
12 issues $1920.00
12 issues $1923.00
12 issues $1926.00
12 issues $1929.00
12 issues $1932.00
12 issues $1935.00
12 issues $1938.00
12 issues $1941.00
12 issues $1944.00
12 issues $1947.00
12 issues $1950.00
12 issues $1953.00
12 issues $1956.00
12 issues $1959.00
12 issues $1962.00
12 issues $1965.00
12 issues $1968.00
12 issues $1971.00
12 issues $1974.00
12 issues $1977.00
12 issues $1980.00
12 issues $1983.00
12 issues $1986.00
12 issues $1989.00
12 issues $1992.00
12 issues $1995.00
12 issues $1998.00
12 issues $2001.00
12 issues $2004.00
12 issues $2007.00
12 issues $2010.00
12 issues $2013.00
12 issues $2016.00
12 issues $2019.00
12 issues $2022.00
12 issues $2025.00
12 issues $2028.00
12 issues $2031.00
12 issues $2034.00
12 issues $2037.00
12 issues $2040.00
12 issues $2043.00
12 issues $2046.00
12 issues $2049.00
12 issues $2052.00
12 issues $2055.00
12 issues $2058.00
12 issues $2061.00
12 issues $2064.00
12 issues $2067.00
12 issues $2070.00
12 issues $2073.00
12 issues $2076.00
12 issues $2079.00
12 issues $2082.00
12 issues $2085.00
12 issues $2088.00
12 issues $2091.00
12 issues $2094.00
12 issues $2097.00
12 issues $2100.00
12 issues $2103.00
12 issues $2106.00
12 issues $2109.00
12 issues $2112.00
12 issues $2115.00
12 issues $2118.00
12 issues $2121.00
12 issues $2124.00
12 issues $2127.00
12 issues $2130.00
12 issues $2133.00
12 issues $2136.00
12 issues $2139.00
12 issues $2142.00
12 issues $2145.00
12 issues $2148.00
12 issues $2151.00
12 issues $2154.00
12 issues $2157.00
12 issues $2160.00
12 issues $2163.00
12 issues $2166.00
12 issues $2169.00
12 issues $2172.00
12 issues $2175.00
12 issues $2178.00
12 issues $2181.00
12 issues $2184.00
12 issues $2187.00
12 issues $2190.00
12 issues $2193.00
12 issues $2196.00
12 issues $2199.00
12 issues $2202.00
12 issues $2205.00
12 issues $2208.00
12 issues $2211.00
12 issues $2214.00
12 issues $2217.00
12 issues $2220.00
12 issues $2223.00
12 issues $2226.00
12 issues $2229.00
12 issues $2232.00
12 issues $2235.00
12 issues $2238.00
12 issues $2241.00
12 issues $2244.00
12 issues $2247.00
12 issues $2250.00
12 issues $2253.00
12 issues $2256.00
12 issues $2259.00
12 issues $2262.00
12 issues $2265.00
12 issues $2268.00
12 issues $2271.00
12 issues $2274.00
12 issues $2277.00
12 issues $2280.00
12 issues $2283.00
12 issues $2286.00
12 issues $2289.00
12 issues $2292.00
12 issues $2295.00
12 issues $2298.00
12 issues $2301.00
12 issues $2304.00
12 issues $2307.00
12 issues $2310.00
12 issues $2313.00
12 issues $2316.00
12 issues $2319.00
12 issues $2322.00
12 issues $2325.00
12 issues $2328.00
12 issues $2331.00
12 issues $2334.00
12 issues $2337.00
12 issues $2340.00
12 issues $2343.00
12 issues $2346.00
12 issues $2349.00
12 issues $2352.00
12 issues $2355.00
12 issues $2358.00
12 issues $2361.00
12 issues $2364.00
12 issues $2367.00
12 issues $2370.00
12 issues $2373.00
12 issues $2376.00
12 issues $2379.00
12 issues $2382.00
12 issues $2385.00
12 issues $2388.00
12 issues $2391.00
12 issues $2394.00
12 issues $2397.00
12 issues $2400.00
12 issues $2403.00
12 issues $2406.00
12 issues $2409.00
12 issues $2412.00
12 issues $2415.00
12 issues $2418.00
12 issues $2421.00
12 issues $2424.00
12 issues $2427.00
12 issues $2430.00
12 issues $2433.00
12 issues $2436.00
12 issues $2439.00
12 issues $2442.00
12 issues $2445.00
12 issues $2448.00
12 issues $2451.00
12 issues $2454.00
1

From one closet to another

I've been stammered for "dumping on" people in the closet, in my last column. "Can you forget so easily your own closet days and ways?" "You offer no solutions, no sympathy, you only criticize - all you're doing is adding fuel to self-hatred." "Who do you think you are, telling other people how to live their lives?"

Oh dear.
I was riding the streetcar. A man got on, a delicious-looking body. Yes, yes, he had a mind and a soul, but all I could think about were his thighs that bunched gloriously as he sat, across the aisle and one row ahead. He began stroking those fabulous thighs with his hands, slowly, in circles, with his palms, idly, unconsciously (?) Please God, either make him stop or substitute my hands or my thighs, I don't care which I thought, awash in fantasy, but do something! The next stop was mine, I got off. How far do we do I - have to go before I can smile at him, speak to him or touch him, unafraid, with an invitation he can accept or reject, unafraid, before the rest of the people on the streetcar will allow any of that - or before it simply doesn't matter anymore what they think or do. I know this: I will have to make the first move, at whatever risk, if anything is to happen. (Speaking of thighs, seen any good tensor fascia lata's lately? That's the most talked-about item to have appeared in this space - you can tell where people's minds are. Mine, too.)

Back to the closet, as it were. An exchange I overheard: "Don't you feel persecuted as a gay person?" "No. When I work everyone knows, and no one cares." "Where do you work?" "I'm a hairdresser." Of course no one cares, you're a joke, and where would we be without jokes? Keep to your place, faggit, and you won't get hurt.

It is extraordinarily beguiling to keep to your place, society makes sure of that. I know. I've moved to a small community in a fairy-tale setting (no innuendo intended), trees, flowers, water, birds, etc., set up house with a lovely man. We sit out in the mornings listening to the wind whispering in the big old trees, eating homemade bread and honey - we even have a cat! To arouse myself from this enchanting languor is hard enough, but to be angry, to work not only against my own inertia but against the vast wallow of it around me, to fight??? Out me another slice of bread, you heavenly man.

One meeting of the Gay Alliance Toward Equality is quite enough to blow this bliss, reports of counterattacks in the Damien case clearly calculated to drain his resources and muzzle an already timid press, of refusals by the sleaziest politicians with the thinnest excuses imaginable to discuss gay rights, of gay people being beaten up and the police saying "you taggots deserve it," of women refused entrance to a gay bar because they're wearing jeans - two hours of that and you're ready to go out shooting, or at least marching. But the march has to be organized, posters made, printed, put up, placards painted, route prepared, permits obtained, speakers enlisted, media informed and reminded, and twenty clotters each spawing twenty more. Meanwhile back in Paradise, he made the bread this week, it rose properly and it has sesame seeds on top. How do you stay angry??? And if you do stay angry, now do you avoid sinking into a kind of permanent funk, into the numb passivity of cynicism?

Back to my accusers. I remember the closet, yes, because I'm still not out of it. There are moments, many of them, when I'm sure I should be declaring my gayness, but where I can tell myself it isn't really relevant, the situation has nothing to do with being gay or straight, nothing to do with sexuality or human rights, there is no fight here, why should I create one? I'm really very polite by nature - no, by upbringing. Besides, I'm wearing my pink triangle, and anyone who wants to ask about it can do so. To my shame, there have also been moments when I took off the pink triangle. It clashed with the colour of my

One of the accusations: "You're really dumping on other gay people because you're guilty about your own performance." Quite possibly so. (Another recent accusation: "There's too much 'spilling-of-guts' writing in The Body Politic, especially in Flaunting It." Perhaps. There's a lot to be spilled, and what better place? Please bear with.)

A teacher told me: "I'd come out at school if I could find a few others - even one - who would come out, too. But I can't, not one." But how on earth is anyone to know he's looking? Could they be thinking the same thing at the same time? So all these potential allies remain forever just that - potential allies.

Which brings us inevitably to isolation, separateness, the one-person closet, yours and mine. I believe this to be society's ultimate weapon against the individual, particularly the 'deviant' individual, against each one of us. As long as you can keep a person thinking s/he's alone, different, one-of-a-kind, strange, you have power over that person. This seems to be especially vicious in our North American Freudian apartment-dwelling self-oriented competition-centred set-up. Guard to yourself, mind your own business, keep your privacy - it's all you've got. Two is legal, three is subversive.

I'm moved by an event described by William Hinton in Fanshen, his account of the Chinese revolution as experienced in 1948 in a Chinese village: a woman complained to the just-established women's committee that her husband had beaten her for attending a meeting of the same committee. Never before, never in thousands of years had a woman complained of such a thing - never had anyone complained of anything, these things were natural, part of life, set in the stars, meant to be. The husband was brought before the committee, reprimanded, refused to repent, the women became so angry they attacked him and beat him! It was dazzling, unheard of, unimaginable. Other women, astounded, began to speak up, all for the first time ever. They discovered that others felt the same, and that together they could do something. It's unlikely they knew they were changing the unchangeable.

Let's talk.

by Michael Riordon

Beggars Banquet

INTERNATIONAL RESTAURANT

Lunch Monday thru Friday 12 to 2:30
Saturday 12 to 4
Dinner Monday thru Saturday 6 to 10

Telephone 364-4167
325 Queen St. West, Toronto, between University & Spadina

haircutting for men

11AM-7PM
MONDAY-SATURDAY

Tel: 691-8369

2218 Queen St. E.
(at Beech Ave.)

Cutting hair means more to us than just 'chopping it off.' A cut... and therefore a style... should be in proportion with your face and body shape, but you must be comfortable with it and like it.

Jane Brooks and Neil Taylor welcome you.

A better face or body...

Remove unwanted hair permanently from cheeks, brows, hairline, body, etc. in private. Safe certified method with positive results. Facials and massage too. Telephone: 967-0095

Summer is the time

- for building cedar decks, fences, etc.
- for restaining old ones with Rez
- for general outdoor painting

Summer is the time for

Queen Lumber

Do it yourself building supplies

Two Locations To Serve You Better

392 Queen St. E.
311 Queen St. E.
Hours 8 am - 6 pm

Telephone
364-6993
Free delivery over $25

Anne Bonny & Mary Read

Lesbian Pirates

by Susan Baker

"History," write Nancy Myron and Charlotte Bunch, "is political." Lesbian feminists in particular have been denied the pride of their past accomplishment. Not only factual research but also studies of myths and legends "gain new meaning when viewed from a woman-identified perspective." In the following article, a report from Charles Johnson's A General History of the Pirates (1725) is entertained from this perspective. What in C. J. S. Thompson's The Cruel Mysteries of Sex (1974) was taken to be the merely curious story of two transvestites is here seen as the bold revolt of two women against a world of male heterosexual privilege.

Anne Bonny and Mary Read were women, were pirates, were lovers. Their story has been mistold and untold, alternating between sheer whorship and oblivion, because men cannot bear to look at a strong woman and say "she is." As Johnson, the best historian on pirates because he was a pirate, put it:

The odd incidents of their rambling lives are such, that some may be tempted to think the whole story no better than a novel, but since it is supported by many thousand witnesses, I mean the people of Jamaica, who were present at their trial, and heard the Story of their Lives, upon the first discovery of Their Sex, the Truth of it can no more be contested than that there were such men in the world as Robbers and Blackbeard, who were Pirates.

Faded in. The port of Charleston, S.C. around 1710. The smell of wet rope, tar, and spilled whiskey. Sweet and clean salt air. A carnival, a circus, a place of whorship and pimping. Dark bars and strange stories, where pirates and respectable businessmen haggle over prices of stolen goods. An open pulsing sea that is the life-line of the New World.

Gangs of children also prowled the wharfs, the beginnings of the poor white trash. They play with knives, drink when they can get it, and steal with ease. A young girl runs among them. She's as dirty as the rest, her red hair cut short as any boy's. They say she's the daughter of a wealthy lawyer, plantation owner, that she speaks French, and they already plan to marry her off. Well, a brat's a brat, and she better not try to pilfer this shop. —Then again, if my life were settled at age ten.

The same port five years later. The wharf is a little cleaner, till tonight. (A sailor on leave is still a sailor on leave.) And the pirates more respectable. Any one who damns England and France can't be all bad. Captain James Brown has become the aristocracy of Penn, and Ben Fletcher the governor of New York. Anne Cormac, dressed in green, her red hair falling loose down her back, frequents the taverns on the arm of first this buccannier, then that. Few remember her as the scab-kneed tomboy. Better stories follow her now. How she beat a would-be suitor with a chair, hospitalizing him for a month; or how during a match she publicly undressed her fencing master, button by button with the edge of her sword. And her a lady and all. She better take care with that skinny pimp, James Bonny, she's keeping company with. Her father better marry her off quick.

Anne Bonny, from an eighteenth-century engraving.

Anne and James Bonny sloped. Her father disowns her, and she in a fit of rage, burns down the plantation and flees to New Providence, near what now is Nassau, Bahamas, surrounded with coral reefs and hidden rocks, dangerous passage for the king's Men O'War, endowed with fresh water, turtles, and wild hogs. New Providence was a pirate's paradise, a haven for the hunted of the New and Old World. Here docked Blackbeard, Captain Kidd, Stede Bonnet, and countless other folk heroes. Here Anne Bonny came to make her fortune.

As she disembarked, a one-eared drunken sailor blocked her way. Before him were two barrels, on one a pint of ale, on the other a brace of pistols. "Nobody passes here who doesn't drink with me," Anne, who had her fill of fathers, priests, and "Hey, baby, can I walk with you," drew her pistol and shot off his other ear.

"By God, is that a head? I thought I was shooting the handle off a mug." She had established herself among the pirates.

She dismissed her husband. "He's of no use to me," and took up residence with a pirate of the times, Captain Jennings, and his mistress Meg.

Meg's first warning to Anne was: "You'll need a man. You can't stay in New Providence without the protection of a man." Unfortunately this was true, not only in New Providence, but in all 17th century society. Women could not enter business or own property. They were the property of their husbands to be bought, sold, murdered at his will. If you were not the property of one man, you were the property of all men. The experiences of the following members of the female population of New Providence, all mistresses and prostitutes, show what happened to women who were not protected by middle class men:

Meg — to protect herself from a drunken husband, stabbed him with a knife. Common law called it Master murder (earlier it was called God murder), which was worse than murder and she fled for life. Somehow she met up with Captain Jennings, who took her to New Providence.

"One Eye" Hawkins — who wore a pirate patch over one eye. A victim of divorce by sale, a common custom where a husband publicly auctioned his wife and the receipt is recognized as divorce papers (more on this later). She was arrested for deserting the second man and sent to Virginia as a bond servant. She escaped to New Providence.

Bel — an excellent midwife who was blamed for the maternal death during Caesarian birth of a wealthy lady and fled.

Zola — a free mulatto who got tired of being fair game for every white man and decided to demand money for it.

To cop some heterosexual privilege, Anne Bonny seduced the richest man on the island, Chicheley Bayard, but soon decided being the mistress of a rich man was as boring as being his wife, and left him for a pirate, Calico Jack Rackham. Anne needed a male protector and figured her for her plans, and Calico Jack, named for his loud striped and patch work pants was perfect. Contrary to popular belief Calico Jack was not a ladies' man; in fact he was not even a pirate (yet). He had made his way across the Atlantic as a captain's paramour and gravitated to New Providence, which more than one historian describes as "a lively homosexual community." He was probably coping as much heterosexual privilege from Bonny as she was from him. (In all honesty, she did have one child by him which she promptly disposed of.) Mary Read (be patient, she'll enter the story soon) was also forced by the society of the time to take a male protector, but not until her affair with Anne had forced her into the open as a woman. You didn't have to kill as many men if you were "with a man aboard ship."

On a full moon the fiddler crabs come out from the ocean and their mud flats to dance on the shore. The fish run thicker and the gulls dive crazy at midnight. On the full moon Anne Bonny planned her first

continued on next page

The Actor's Stage presents
The duMaurier Festival of Plays

The Rocky Horror Show

(or, Thrills with the Transsexual Transvestite of Transylvania)

June 25 - July 17

Evenings: 8:00 pm. Late Show Fri & Sat 11:30 pm. Prices: $3.50, $4.50, $6.50.
Students: $1.00. Tickets available at ATO, The Bay, Saksberg's, Shoppers Record and Tape Mart.

The Ryerson Theatre, 595-5088
43 Gerrard St. E., Toronto

The Book Nook

2481 Yonge Street (at Castlefield)
in Toronto

We sell:

- Mandate
- Blueboy
- Advocate
- Body Politic

Open 8 am - 7 pm

Come - Browse

Friendly staff to serve you

A Song Yearning for Real Freedom

Freedom to live and love; freedom to share in your work and your friendships; freedom to be your own happy self...

"Songs from the Philippines"

A passionate Asian book by Feteris, Rocha and De Las Alas. $7.00 Illustrated, Exposition Press, Hicksville NY 11801, USA. Overseas $7.50. Great Gift.

FEATURES

Lesbian Pirates

Continued from page 14

do this, but Anne screamed that she would not be bought and sold like a hog or cattle," and the crew realized she would kill any man, buyer or seller, who took part in it. Finally the governor released her on the condition that she give up her sinful ways, i.e. go back to her lawful master.

It was Mary who convinced Anne not to murder the governor. Under her direction, her heroes and heroines stole another ship and set out after James. He, knowing his helical wife had already fled for his life, but his profitable turtle business was burned to the ground. Anne and Mary were on account together.

Most historians chose to either not mention or to refute Anne and Mary's love. Some say Anne didn't even know Mark was a woman. It is known that once aboard ship, Anne and the young, fair Mark Read were constantly together. The one account that all stories agree on is that Calico Jack became enraged at Anne's new-found love and threatened to slit his throat from ear to ear. Bursting upon the cabin he found not Mark, but Mary, a woman, stretched out on the bed. As one historian describes it:

Ironically of all the genuine lovers he might have found her with, this historian obviously uses the great witness syndrome to belittle a strong woman) he had to pick a time when the figure sprawled on the bed was just a woman in man's clothing.

Men would have us believe that just minutes before, Anne, flustered by repulsed seductions, had thrown Mark on the bed and ripped off his clothes to discover Mary. Considering all the time they had spent together, this is a highly unlikely coincidence.

Anne was a member of gay culture, and Pierre the most notorious homosexual in the Caribbean. While a straight man may have been fooled by Mark's clothing, I find it doubtful that those who would have mistaken Mary for long.

Anne and Mary were evenly matched in strength, able to outmuscle many men. Neither could have overcome the other. Even if by some stretch of the imagination, Anne had mistaken Mary for a boy (and considering Mary's behavior in New Providence they were probably lovers even then) Mary had to have come willingly to that bed.

Besides, considering that there were only two known English women pirates, what were the chances that they would end up "accidentally" on the same ship.

At any rate, Mary emerged as a woman, and the two were inseparable, wearing fine dresses, meat, literally, for queens, sometimes dressing as men.

They took over command of the ship Men-of-War were sent out to capture that "damnable female", which historians would have us believe referred to the ship. (Later they refer to "those infamous women". Come now, a ship in plural?)

At another one of historian Johnson's "Pirate Trials", the captain of the Elizabeth, taken off the coast of Florida, describes the real relation of power aboard ship.

It was not until we were about to be allowed to continue on our way that the notorious Captain Rackham (Calico) appeared. He is indeed a neric figure in his colorful costume but he looked to have just risen from his bed. His eyes were puffy and his speech indistinct. He stood clear when ordered out of the way by his damnable female companion.

At another trial in Jamaica in 1720, John Harper, a pirate, said, "She had the leader's gift and could arouse us to declare war on the whole world."

The Royal Queen rolled peacefully in the Cuban anchovy. The waves slapped on her streamlined sides. She was as fast as a sloop and as powerful as a Man o'War, with 20 pound guns, the best made ship on either side of the Atlantic. Her cabins were lined with mahogany and inlaid with gold and jewels. Anne and Mary wanted her.

The price was even sweeter because it belonged to Chedley Bayard. Anne's old lover, who had long been out for her neck, and worse still, who had taken James Bonny as a business partner. The ship had been entrusted to the command of Captain Hudson, a self-satisfied ladies' man. The rest was easy.

Anne, finding it convenient to play the body seduced him into bringing her aboard with the promise to first order at his men below deck to protect her "delicate" reputation. Once on board, Anne dragged Hudson's wife and took a walk on the now empty deck. The next morning with sweet words about what a great lover he had been, she bid him goodbye and he sailed out of the harbor. A little way out he was attacked by Anne's crew. He ordered the gunmen to open fire, but they could not. All the firing pirts had been doused with water the night before. The fastest ship in the Caribbean was taken with only one man being killed - Captain Hudson, by Mary. Anne had had her revenge on Chedley by taking his ship, and now his crew.

All pirates are eventually taken, and so with Anne and Mary. A hurricane had recently destroyed the Royal Queen and halved the crew. They now sailed with a customary pirate's sloop. So did their conqueror, Captain Barret, reasoning correctly that the customary Man-o'War could never outmaneuver a smaller sloop. When he pulled alongside, the men were all drunk and it took them a while to realize it was not a fellow pirate but the King's own navy preparing to open fire on him. In the heat of battle, the crew all scurried below deck in terror, except Anne and Mary, who fought like "all the female demons a sailor's nightmares on a stormy night are made of". At one point Mary came out to the hold demanding the men come out and join the fight. When they didn't, she opened fire on them, killing two and wounding eight. The next day, it took almost an hour and all Barret's crew to subdue two women.

They were taken to trial in St. Jago de la Vega, and the whole crew was found guilty. When asked if they knew of any reasons why they should be spared, Anne and Mary answered, "Your honor, we plead our bellies," and were pardoned. Nor neither woman actually produced a child, and the doctor who examined them was the same doctor they had saved from the rack aboard the prison ship Jewel less than a year earlier.

Anne was allowed to see dear Calico before he was hanged, and all she had to say was: "I am sorry to see you in this predicament, but had you fought like a man you would not now have to die like a dog."

Mary died of a fever contracted in prison, and Anne just disappeared. Some say she got married and returned to Charleston, highly unlikely considering she was still wanted for arson, attempted murder, conspiracy against the King's authority, and capturing and releasing not a few slave ships. Other stories in the journal's runny, or got harped with a group of religious fanatics.

At any rate, at the time Anne Hutchinson was exiled, the Salem witches were hanged, and the going price for a wife was less than a head of beef, two women managed to live the way they wanted. They knew what we are all learning. If men make the laws, we must break them. Outlaw to break the great law Prick, we are lovers.[]

Reprinted with permission from the collection of short biographies, Women Remembered, edited by Nancy Myron and Charlotte Bunch (82/25 from Diana Press, 12 West 25th St., Baltimore, Md 21215). Other titles in the collection include Queen Christina, lesbian ruler of Sweden; Emily Dickinson, poet; the Tinker Women; Doris Calvé De Castro, adventurer; Susan B. Anthony, suffragist; and Gertrude Stein, writer.

206 WELLESLEY ST. E. - TORONTO.

TRAVEL WITH "YOU" IN MIND.

BOOKINGS WILL INCLUDE
UP-TO-DATE LISTING OF GAY HOTELS, BARS, CLUBS

The Gemini Restaurant

Continental Cuisine
582 Church Street
Toronto, Ontario
(416) 922-5327

I.S.B.A.
P.O. Box 142
Station "Q"
Toronto
Canada
M4T 2L9

for gay male friends from Truro, N.S. to Duncan, B.C., from Topsail, Nfld., to everywhere in Canada

RICHMOND STREET health emporium ltd
260 richmond street east, toronto, canada 363-4329

Crackdown

Continued from page 1

what was happening and to mobilize both gays and straights to fight back. Probably one of the most important spin-offs of the crackdown has been its vilifying effect on Montreal's gay community. For the first time, a broad range of gays have been brought together: women, men, francophones, anglophones, and persons of every political perspective.

As Ron Dayman, spokesperson for CHAR, put it at the June rally: "We are only the beginning of a lavender menace, a lavender menace which will grow in Montreal. The struggle does not end here today. We have only begun to show our strength.

We may have been successful. There is an almost eerie calm descending over the gay community in the St. Lawrence Valley corridor. The baths, clubs and bars are operating as usual - attendance had dropped dramatically in the days following the raids. And there have been no raids anywhere since the Club Bath raid in Ottawa.

We may have pulled it off. Gay people dropped to the pavement in numbers as never before, but just have aborted this country's most organized and vicious attack on gay people.

But as we go to press, the games are still some weeks away and "security measures" are tightening up. It's not over yet! But now, we're ready. □

Police at the scene of the Neptune Club raid, North America's biggest prostitution roundup. The Montreal press had a field day with the cleanup. This photo and caption captured a sensational story about the arrest of 89 so-called prostitutes who were unaccountably caught without any customers.

The Police and the Press

The Montreal police are a power unto themselves. They are the corrupt arm of a notoriously corrupt city government, and they don't like people who give them trouble, people who challenge their arbitrary decisions.

They don't like Peter Maloney. He is (or was) he has since resigned) the manager of the Club Bath chain in Canada, and he intended to open a bath in Montreal. You have to apply for a "license" to open a bath, and Maloney's application was approved by all of the city departments. Except the police. They felt it would "become a common bawdy house."

Maloney obtained a writ of mandamus from the courts which would allow the bath to operate until the matter with the police was settled. And he subpoenaed the chief of police.

Now that is not done in Montreal. Reaction was swift. The Chief of Police appeared in court to testify during the afternoon of January 21 of this year. At 10:00 that same night, plainclothes officers checked into the Club Baths as customers to begin the first of three nights of surveillance. After midnight on the 23rd they struck.

It was obviously more than a routine raid. The terrorist tactics of the crackdown were intensified by the desire for revenge on someone who dared to fight back. As in other raids passkeys were not accepted, doors were smashed with axes and crowbars. But in this case the 34 arrested clients were held in jail overnight. They were charged with summary offences only, and it is customary to release such people on their own recognizance.

All of the men were required to submit to VD tests. The police handed out "questionnaires" for the charged men to fill out, and that is the most frightening thing of all. The men were never told that they were under no obligation whatsoever to answer the questions concerning the sexual activities they had engaged in while in the baths. They were given the questionnaires before they had a chance to consult their lawyers. Of course, the information can now be used against them.

The timing of that particular raid on the Club Bath in Montreal suggests that the police were reacting to pressures put upon them by Maloney. But other raids both in that city and in Ottawa were indeed part of a "cleanup."

The police were not always quailed in when they said during these raids. And some of the customers arrested during the Neptune raid report that remarks were made by the police which suggested that they "were cleaning things up."

Certainly there was no good reason to seize the membership lists of both the Neptune and the Club Baths. Unless, of course, you were interested in intimidating the 10,000 men whose names were on those cards.

The management of the Club Bath has formally requested that the cards be returned, and that they not be copied. They may well get them back. But there are going to be a lot of gay men in this country who will suspect, and rightly so, that their names are "on file" somewhere. Further evidence of an organized crackdown: the Ottawa Chief of Police telephoned the Chief of Police in Hamilton and asked him "what he was going to do about the Club Bath in his city." Fortunately, relations between the police and the baths in Hamilton are very cordial, and the chief replied that he is not planning to do anything about the baths.

Of course, relations between the Club and the police in Ottawa were once cordial as well. When the bath opened in December, 1974, Maloney visited the police and explained to them exactly what the operation would consist of. That was his practice in every city in which one of the Club Baths opened. The police told him at that time that as far as they were concerned, he would be operating a legal business.

A lot of little details, seemingly insignificant points, tend to add up. The Lord Elgin Hotel has one of Ottawa's few gay bars. During the two weeks preceding the raid on the Ottawa baths, it received several petty complaints from liquor inspectors. They had never had any trouble before. Coincidence?

When the Neptune Sauna in Montreal was raided, customers and employees were charged, of course. But the directors were charged as well. And it is very difficult to keep a liquor licence when you have criminal charge pending against you.

If a gay bar closes in Montreal this summer, there will be no regrets among those responsible for Olympic security. Guy Toupin, co-ordinating officer of police forces for security at the Olympics, has said that the raids are "a part of our normal police work and are not specifically related to preparation for the Olympics." But, he went on to say, "it is such action helps us in turning up potential terrorists, so much the better."

Terrorists in the baths? Sure. But the terrorists hidden among the Kingston and Montreal winos who are getting six month jail sentences now instead of the usual couple of days.

"Friends are coming." That's what the simple minds devising the games are telling us and to those same simple minds wins on the streets are not good P.R. And neither are visible gay people. It's just a further measure of their stupidity that they think that by driving gay people out of their gathering places they will make us less visible.

Many gays, afraid to go to the bars or baths, will turn to the streets, the cars, and the parks. Of course, you can pick them off more easily there. And change them with more serious offences. So maybe they're not so dumb after all.

The press. A real tale of two cities in the way they reacted to the bath raids. The Montreal press had a field day with the stories and their treatment made the Ottawa press's handling of the "vice ring" scandal last year look balanced by comparison.

Headlines like "Record haul of male prostitutes made in deluxe local saunas and Equipment 'normal' but club may not were typical. Stories drooled over details of "naked men" and "extra services" and the fact these dens of iniquity were accepting Chagrel!

None of these papers seemed to question the police handouts or see anything ludicrous about terming the patrons of a gay bath "prostitutes."

None of these papers seemed to question the police handouts or see anything ludicrous about terming the patrons of a gay bath "prostitutes."

The Ottawa press, on the other hand, provided a much more accurate picture of what was going on and, more importantly, tended to do so from the point of view of the gay group there. Headlines in Ottawa were "Gays condemn vice ring club raids." "City gays say raid was Games clean-up," and "Sauna boss complains files raid 'illegal'."

The difference, of course, is that Ottawa has one of the most militant gay groups in the country. Gays of Ottawa have been through, diligent and very public in its work. It is a known force in the community and its fine work during the recent "vice ring" scandal gave it a high profile in the editorial offices of the local dailies. When Gays of Ottawa held a press conference, the media are there and they ask serious questions.

Not so in Montreal. At least until now. The formation of CHAR, with its broad base in the gay community, is certainly a cause for rejoicing. But it's a new force on the city scene. The press would have nothing to draw on but its own prejudices and misconceptions about gay people. And releases from the police, those great pals of gay people.

CHAR spokesperson Ron Dayman is well aware of the importance of an organized group for Montreal. "Given the vulnerability of homosexuals, it is imperative that gays organize to be prepared. We must be an organized force if we are effectively to protect ourselves against a homophobic society." □

This article is the product of the talents of gay people in both Montreal and Ottawa. The Body Politic would like to credit and thank John Blacklock, Ron Dayman and Stuart Russell in Montreal, and David Garmille in Ottawa for their fine work in assembling the material and photographs. Thanks also to Gary Kinsman and Peter Maloney for their assistance. The article was compiled by the Toronto editors, who take responsibility for any errors.

As we go to press, we have learned that COJO employee Stuart Russell was fired two days after a picture showing him in the June 19 march appeared in the Montreal press. No reason was given for his dismissal.

Practical for Peanuts to exploring our image in the arts.

In the process, The Body Politic has helped to create the gay community.

Gays are no longer just isolated individuals, without a voice.

Instead we are part of a broad national movement working to make things better for all of us.

A community needs the support and involvement of as many members as possible.

To continue bringing you more news, features and reviews, The Body Politic needs your support.

What's your part in the community?

It costs practically nothing. Subscribe now.

& GROWING FAST

15,000 READERS

For nearly five years now, The Body Politic has brought its readers some of the finest writing about gays available anywhere.

Lots of news that make a real difference in our lives - both in our struggles, our organizing and beginning to get what we demand.

Features - interviews, controversy - all the issues that turned a lot of people's heads.

And recently a new review section dedicated to new books.

Please start my subscription (enclose money with order)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

State _____

Zip _____

Canada 1 yr. class $4.50 $6.00

USA 2 yr. class 7.75 9.50

USA 1 yr. class 4.00 5.00

2 yr. class 7.00 8.50

International 1 yr. class 10.00 12.00

2 yr. class 18.00 22.00

The Body Politic, Box 7289, Station A, Toronto, Ontario, CANADA M6W 1K2

August

NEWSLETTER designed as meeting place for writers and publishers. Three issues. $2.00 (letters, Cobalt, Ontario) P.O. 110.

LETTERS

GAY FRIENDS invites invited. Jack Haring, Box 808888, Toronto, Ont. M5W 1X9. INTERNATIONAL COVERAGE.

GAY PEN PAL club now forming. Free listing with this ad. Chasens, P.O. Box 423, Verdun Station, Verdun, Quebec, H4G 3K9.

PROMISER would like to correspond with sincere, open-minded people. Am lonely but positive thinking individual. Cornelia Stue, 17435 R.Q. Box 5500, Chilleche, Ohio, 45601, USA.

BONGO & CONGO play, 32, 180 lbs., 6'1", Black. Also play the Bass and am a fair artist. I prefer friendly, sincere types, lovable, kind, understanding. I'd like to give the real of themselves. Please send photo. Write R.K. Demson 106842, Box P, Marquette, Me., 04855.

POSITIVE THINKING YVR, 40, 5'6", 195 lbs. Would like to correspond with any sincere open-minded person. Am currently in a relationship. Chilleche 131485, P.O. Box 5500, Chilleche, Ohio, 45601, USA.

PEN PAL wanted. I'm 25, 5'6", 150 lbs., currently incarcerated in Chilleche Correctional Inst. My hobbies, are body building, writing, poetry, drawing and all kinds of sports. Write Edward E. Passey, c/o Chilleche Cor. Inst., Chilleche, OHIO 45601.

OTHER

BROADCASTING EXPERIENCE? Or anyone interested in producing gay radio programming in Toronto, call Harvey, 960-0553.

PROVINCETOWN resorts in New York, New England, are directly from in comfort and safety. Phone Bill 534-7851.

HANDICAPPED though, emboldened, gay give a message, income can't handle taxi fares for an evening. If you're heading there from an evening, call me on my lift, please call TGA, 964-6600.

NALAD PRESS is interested in seeing lesbian novels submitted for publication. Every field cutting very briefly the general plot and word length of the manuscript. Enclosed self-addressed stamped envelope. Write NALAD Press, c/o The Ladder, P.O. Box 5029, Washington Station, Reno, Nevada 89413, USA.

WINNIEPE Visit the Office Sauna Bath, 1060 Main Street 589-6133.

MY VAN AND I Our bodies available for light M/M (Moving and Hauling). Interested in all stories. Discretion assured. Phone Keith after 6, 925-5702 - Toronto.

BAD STUDIOS The Unusual by Mail Order. Dept. BP, Box 545, Station Z, Toronto, Ontario M5N 2Z6.

GAY JEWISH men and women are now organized in Toronto. Join us! For details, call Don 653-0498 or Harvey 960-0553.

ALCOHOLISM AND THE GAY COMMUNITY Am engaged in research for a sociology thesis. Need leads on any gay alcoholism rehabilitation programmes and facilities. A.A. groups, etc. Also contact with Canadian gay groups willing to distribute questionnaires about general drinking patterns at their meetings. Gay Alcoholism Research Project, P.O. Drawer J, Cedar Grove, NJ 07009, USA.

PEDESTAL LIBERATION GROUP We are working for improved understanding of pedophilia and for the right of kids and adults to have heterosexual life. If you are a liberated pedophile, or want to be - write us. Details and sample of our monthly $1. Better life 256-12 Robertson, Beverly Hills, CA 90211, USA.

NATIONAL GAY personal ad listings. Publication for all lonely boys and girls every age. Many nude photos. Latest issue and ad form $1.00 from Broad Street Journal, Box 337, Milliken, CO 80565.

VISITING PHILADELPHIA Orylia, Lina, sophisticated crowd. French cuisine, great drinks, 1902 Orylia, Allegro, 182 Spruce, three floors of disco, drinks, games!

The Community Page is a listing of Canadian groups which primarily direct themselves toward alleviating or struggling against gay oppression. It includes: democratically constituted organizations of gay people; co-operatively run clubs and community centres; bookstores which advertise themselves as sellers of gay and feminist literature; and gay periodicals operated on a non-hierarchical, non-profit basis. If you wish to be listed, please send the information about your group to The Body Politic, Box 7289, Stn A, Toronto, Ontario M5W 1X9. Be sure to notify us of any change in information already listed on the Community Page.

ST. JOHN'S

CANADIAN HOMOPHILE ASSOC OF NEWFOUNDLAND
St John's, GPO
St John's, Newfoundland A1C 3K8

HALIFAX

ALTERNATIVES BOOKSHOP
201 St. 1362 Sturges St.
Halifax, Nova Scotia
GAY ALLIANCE FOR EQUALITY
Box 161, Armdale Stn
Halifax, Nova Scotia B3L 4G9
Gayline (902) 429-8989

HALIFAX WOMEN'S CENTRE
5473 Brenton Place
Box 555, Armdale Stn
Halifax, Nova Scotia
(902) 423-0543

QUEBEC CITY

CENTRE HUMANAIRE 'O' AIDE ET DE LIBERATION
253 rue de la Francophonie
BP 506, Haute Ville (Mailing Address)
Quebec, Quebec G1R 4R8
(418) 525-4997

SERVICE D'ENTRAIDE POUR HOMOPHILES A QUEBEC
264 rue de la Francophonie
BP 506 Haute Ville (Mailing Address)
Quebec, Quebec G1R 4R8
(418) 524-8344

MONTREAL

ANDROGYNY BOOKSTORE
1217 Crescent St.
Montreal, Quebec H3G 2P1
(514) 966-2131

CENTRE HOMOPHILE URBAIN DE MONTREAL

6331 St. Laurent
Montreal, Quebec
(514) 275-3581

GAY INDIAN AND RAIN LINE

Tues - Sat 7:10 pm
(514) 288-1011

GAY MCGILL

McGill University, Rm B-41
3480 McTavish
Montreal, Quebec H3A 1X9
(514) 392-1000

GROUP HOMOSEXUEL D'ACTION POLITIQUE

CP 235, Station N
Montreal, Quebec
(514) 392-1000

LAVINIS MONTREAL

c/o Women's Info and Referral Centre
3535 St Urban
Montreal, Quebec
(514) 392-1000

METROPOLITAN COMMUNITY CHURCH/EGISE COMMUNAUTAIRE DE MONTREAL

CP 610, Succursale, NDG
Montreal, Quebec H4A 3R1
(514) 842-1000

MONTREAL LESBIAN ORGANIZATION

3535 St. Urban Street,
Montreal, Quebec
H2X 2N6
(514) 842-7871

NACRES GAY JEWISH DISCUSSION GROUP

Box 298, Station M,
Montreal, P. Q.

NEW WOMEN CENTRE

3468 College-Angels
Montreal, Quebec
H3H 1T7

SLIGHTLY OTHER LESBIANS

(BOL) 3595 St Urban
Montreal, Quebec
(514) 842-1066

OTTAWA

GAYS OF OTTAWA/GAIS DE L'OUTAOUAIS
Box 2919, Stn D (Mailing Address)
Ottawa, Ontario K1P 5W9
(613) 822-5555

OTTAWA

Box 2919, Stn D (Mailing Address)
Ottawa, Ontario K1P 5W9
(613) 822-5555

GAY PEOPLE OF CARLETON

c/o CUSA, Carleton University
Colonial Drive
Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5D6

OTTAWA WOMEN'S CENTRE

3461 Princess St
Kingston, Ontario K7L 1B5
METROPOLITAN COMMUNITY CHURCH
254 Cooper #11
Ottawa, Ontario K2P 0G4

OTTAWA WOMEN'S CENTRE

821 Somerset West
Ottawa, Ontario
(613) 233-2590

KINGSTON

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY HOMOPHILE ASSOC
Student Affairs Centre
51 Queen's Crescent
Queen's University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 2T7
(613) 547-2836

TORONTO

AMAZON PRESS
121 Avenue Rd.
Toronto, Ontario
(416) 927-8226

CATALYST PRESS

315 Blandy Avenue
Scarborough, Ontario
M1N 2S9

COMMUNITY HOMOPHILE ASSOC OF TORONTO

199 Church St, 2nd floor
Montreal, Quebec H3G 1Z1
(514) 862-1544

OGINITY

Box 249, Stn E
Toronto, Ontario M6H 4E2
GAY ACADEMIC UNION
c/o Professor John A. Lee University, Scarborough College
U of T
West Hill, Ontario M1C 1A4

GAY ALLIANCE AT YORK

211 Yorkville College Res.
(416) 967-3509, 667-3632
Mailing address: c/o CVSF
Central Square, Rm 105
York University
4700 Keele St.
Downsview, Ontario M3J 1P3

GAY ALLIANCE TOWARD EQUALITY

193 Carlton Street, Toronto, Ont.
M5A 2K7
(416) 964-0148

GAY WOMEN UNLIMITED

201 Church St.
Toronto, Ontario M5R 1Z1

GLAD GAY BOOKSTORE

c/o Collier St (at York St)
Toronto, Ontario
(416) 961-4161

METROPOLITAN COMMUNITY CHURCH

29 Granby Street, Toronto, Ont.
M6B 1H6
Drop-in/Office displays Wk, 7 pm-midnight
Church (416) 364-9799

NACRES GAY JEWISH DISCUSSION GROUP

Box 298, Station M,
Montreal, P. Q.

NEW WOMEN CENTRE

3468 College-Angels
Montreal, Quebec
H3H 1T7

SLIGHTLY OTHER LESBIANS

(BOL) 3595 St Urban
Montreal, Quebec
(514) 842-1066

OTTAWA

GAYS OF OTTAWA/GAIS DE L'OUTAOUAIS
Box 2919, Stn D (Mailing Address)
Ottawa, Ontario K1P 5W9
(613) 822-5555

OTTAWA

Box 2919, Stn D (Mailing Address)
Ottawa, Ontario K1P 5W9
(613) 822-5555

WAGES DUE LESBIANS

Box 38, Stn E
Toronto, Ontario
(416) 466-7457

WOMEN'S INFORMATION CENTRE

Box 189, Stn A
Toronto, Ontario

MISSISSAUGA

GAYS OF MISSISSAUGA
Box 133, Station A
Mississauga, Ontario L5A 2Z7

GUELPH

GUELPH GAY EQUALITY
Rm 221, University Centre
University of Guelph
Gayline (519) 836-4550
1-hour recorded message

HAMILTON

HAMILTON-MASTERS HOMOPHILE ASSOC
Box 44, Stn B
Hamilton, Ontario L8L 7T7

LONDON

HOMOPHILE ASSOC OF LONDON ONTARIO
649 Colborne St.
London, Ontario N6A 3Z2
(519) 433-3762

KITCHENER/WATERLOO

WATERLOO UNIVERSITIES GAY LIBERATION MOVEMENT
Federation of Students
University of Waterloo
Waterloo, Ontario N2L 3G1
(519) 885-1211 ex 2372

WOMEN'S PLACE

Box 4, Dupont St.
Waterloo, Ontario N2J 2G8
(519) 744-7011

WINDSOR

WINDSOR GAY UNITY
Box 3, Sandwich Stn
Windsor, Ontario N9C 3Y6
(519) 254-2921, 256-2927 or 254-9494

WOMEN'S PLACE

327 Ouellette Ave., #202
Windsor, Ontario N9A 4J1
(519) 252-0244

THUNDER BAY

NORTHERN WOMEN'S CENTRE
314 North Archibald St.
Box 314, Stn F (Mailing Address)
Thunder Bay, Ontario P7C 4V9
(807) 662-3989

WINNIPEG

A WOMAN'S PLACE
14 Walnut St.
Winnipeg, Manitoba R3G 1P2
(204) 756-4581

OGINITY/WINNIPEG

Box 227, Transcona P.O.
Transcona, Manitoba R2C 2Z5

GAYS FOR EQUALITY

Box 27, UMSU
University of Manitoba
Winnipeg, Manitoba R3T 2N2
(204) 474-6274

SASKATOON

A WOMAN'S PLACE
c/o Prof. Peter Millard
Box 1662
Saskatoon, Saskatchewan S7K 3R8

GAY COMMUNITY CENTRE

310 - 20th Street East (2nd fl)
Box 1662 (Mailing Address)
Saskatoon, Saskatchewan S7K 3R8
(306) 695-0972

REGINA

ATROPOS FELLOWSHIP SOCIETY/ODYSSEY CLUB

THREE OF CUPS
(A lesbian-homosexual coffeehouse run by a collective of women)
567 Queen Street West
Toronto, Ontario M5V 2B6
(51) members, $2/others

TORONTO AREA GAYS (TAG)

Consultation and/or phone-line
(416) 964-6600
Box 6706, Stn A (Mailing Address)
Toronto, Ontario M5W 1X5

TORONTO TRANSVESTITE GROUP

Box 6706, Station A, Toronto, Ont.
M5W 1X5
Meetings at 199 Church Street
1st & 3rd Sundays of each month at 7:30 pm

TORONTO WOMEN'S BOOKSHOP

65 Harbord St.
Toronto, Ontario
(416) 922-8745

VANCOUVER

LESBIAN CAUCUS OF THE BC FEDERATION OF WOMEN P.O. Box 4294

Vancouver, BC

GAY ALLIANCE TOWARD EQUALITY

P.O. Box 1463, Stn A
Vancouver, BC
(604) 255-3551

GAY PEOPLE OF SIMON FRASER

c/o Student Society
Simon Fraser University
Burnaby, BC
(604) 291-3270

GAY PEOPLE OF UBC

c/o Student Union Bldg
University of British Columbia
Vancouver, BC V6T 1W6

SOCIETY FOR EDUCATION, ACTION, RESEARCH AND COUNSELLING IN HOMOSEXUALITY (SEARCH)

Box 6903, Bentall Centre
Vancouver, BC V7X 1A8

SEARCH COMMUNITY Services

301-1387 Richards Street,
Vancouver, BC
(604) 689-1039 or 689-1119

VICTORIA

VICTORIA WOMEN'S CENTRE

Box 219, Victoria Bldg
Victoria, BC
(604) 385-3843

NATIONAL/REGIONAL

CANADIAN GAY ARCHIVES

Box 7289, Station A, Toronto,
Ontario M5W 1X9
(416) 863-6320

COALITION FOR GAY RIGHTS IN ONTARIO

Box 4, Carlton Street
Toronto, Ontario
(416) 964-0148

COMMITTEE TO DEFEND JOHN GARDEN

Box 117, Stn V
Toronto, Ontario M6R 3A4

LIBERTARIANS FOR GAY RIGHTS

Box 14, York
315 Blandy Avenue Scarborough,
Ontario M1N 2S6

NATIONAL GAY RIGHTS

COMMISSION NATIONALE pour les DROITS DES HOMOSEXUELS (ONG/CNHO)
Box 219, Succursale O,
Ottawa, Canada K1P 5W9
(613) 233-0152

NATIONAL SOCIAL CREDIT GAY CAUCUS

Box 1267, Station A, Toronto,
Ontario M5W 1G7

UNITARIAN UNIVERSALIST

c/o Elgin Blair
Box 6248, Stn A
Toronto, Ontario M5W 1P6

PUBLICATIONS

THE BODY POLITIC

Box 7289, Stn A
Toronto, Ontario M5W 1X9
Sub: $2.50/6 issues

GAY TIDE

Box P.O. 1463, Stn A
Vancouver, BC
(604) 255-3551

GAY TIMES

Box 361, Cite
Montreal, Quebec
Sub: $3.00 issues

GAY RISING

Box 124, Stn V
Toronto, Ontario
Sub: $2.10 issue

LONG TIME COMING

Lesbian-Feminist newspaper
Box 214
Montreal, Quebec
Sub: $5.95

PEDESTAL

Lesbian-Feminist newspaper
Box 214
Montreal, Quebec
Sub: $5.95

PEDESTAL

Lesbian-Feminist newspaper
Box 214
Montreal, Quebec
Sub: $5.95

PEDESTAL

Lesbian-Feminist newspaper
Box 214
Montreal, Quebec
Sub: $5.95

Only $2.50 for a 6-month subscription.
Send to: Montreal Gay Times, P.O. Box 7289,
Station C, Montreal, Quebec.

Montreal's finest gay newspaper.

Only $2.50 for a 6-month subscription.
Send to: Montreal Gay Times, P.O. Box 7289,
Station C, Montreal, Quebec.

Montreal's finest gay newspaper.

Only $2.50 for a 6-month subscription.
Send to: Montreal Gay Times, P.O. Box 7289,
Station C, Montreal, Quebec.

Montreal's finest gay newspaper.

Only $2.50 for a 6-month subscription.
Send to: Montreal Gay Times, P.O. Box 7289,
Station C, Montreal, Quebec.

Montreal's finest gay newspaper.</

The Conversation Opener

People are going to ask you what it means. It's not a well known symbol... yet People who would never ask why you're wearing a "Gay Rights" button are very curious about the Pink Triangle.

Of course, it's more than just a way of getting a natural, easy conversation going about gay oppression and liberation.

By wearing the pin you are demonstrating your solidarity with the international gay movement. You are reminding people of a period in history they would rather cover up or forget. Or are ignorant of altogether.

And by the by, you are helping us spread the word. Proceeds from the sale of these pins go to Pink Triangle Press, a non-profit gay liberation publishing collective.

Wear the Pink Triangle. Wear it with awareness and pride. You'll get people talking about gay rights. And that's one of the things we all want.

Please send me _____ pins at $1.25 each. I enclose $_____ (cash or money order only please) in payment.

Name _____

Address _____

The Pink Triangle Pin. Pink enamel on a solid copper base, sides 3 cm. Mounted on a 9 cm. by 5 cm card which explains its historical significance. Just $1.25 each, includes postage. Please send cash or money order – no cheques please. Allow 2 weeks for delivery.

(Please send your order & payment to Pink Triangle Press, Box 639, Station A, Toronto, Ont., Canada, M5W 1E4)